Since then Skippy has given his family devotion and love. On a recent family outing he almost gave his life.

An 18-inch rattlesnake was coiled to strike Donald Essig, 6, playing in high grass near the O'Neill Park campsite. "A rattlesnake! A rattlesnake!" cried Donald.

"We heard the rattling-it was the loudest noise I ever heard," said Mrs. Essig, who was back by the tent with the rest of the family.

Skippy heard it, too. Running to Donald's aid, he got between the boy and the snake. He grabbed the rattler in his mouth, but he was too far behind the reptile's head. It turned and struck, its fangs piercing Skippy's face alongside his mouth.

A neighboring camper killed the rattler, the second that had been seen in the area, with a gun. Skippy's face started to swell. He needed medical attention fast.

Sgt. and Mrs. Essig got Skippy into their car, left their three children with friends at the campgrounds, and headed downhill to the nearest veterinarian, more than 10 miles away.

"My husband kept tooting his horn, he flashed his emergency lights, but people didn't get out of the way," said Mrs. Essig. They finally reached the El Toro Animal Hospital, but it was Sunday and the clinic was closed.

"We thought we were going to lose him," she said. They dashed to a nearby Tarbell Realtors office, where Mrs. Essig once worked, and tele-

Patricia Brainwashed By SLA, Hearst Says

Randolph A. Hearst branded the so-called Symbionese Liberation Army kidnapers of his daughter "cruel people" Saturday and said he believed she was brainwashed before she announced that she had decided to stay with her cap-

The Register

In an interview in the dining room of his home in suburban Hillsborough, Hearst also said he believed Patricia is alive and that it was "idiotic" to think that she was a party to the kidnaping.

Before the kidnaping, she was a liberal but not a radical, he said. He also reiterated that the $4 million placed in escrow for Patricia's safe return will revert to the Hearst Corporation if the kidnapers do not meet the May 3 deadline for releasing her.

Hearst, who is president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner, was asked about the theory that Patricia was subjected to a form of brainwashing before she made a tape recorded statement broadcast last Wednes-

"That's a psychological question, and you should ask someone in that field," Hearst said. "I think she was-not that they had her in a tiger cage or anything like thatbut I think that after 60 days you can change people, i think she believes some of the things on the tape and not others. The girl I knew 60 days before would never have made the statement she made."

In the tape recording, Patricia, who was abducted last Feb. 4. called her father a "corporate liar" and said s'e had chosen to stay with the terrorist SLA and "fight beside them."

Hearst said the SLA had broken its word.

"I guessed wrong on the SLA all along, and I thought they were going to keep their word and didn't," he said. "I do believe she's unharmed, physically unharmed, but to put out a message one day saying they're going to release her and then a day later put out one saying she's going to stay with them, this is just plain cruelty. I think they're just cruel people, and I think they fundamentally hate this waiting for the final report, has promised to pay the Internal Revenue Service $432.787 in back taxes plus interest for 1969 through 1972. The White House says this will leave Nixon "almost totally wiped out" financially.

The request of the IRS was made by Arthur Blech, head of the Los Angeles accounting firm which has prepared Nixon's tax returns for a number

Hughes Money ... Replacement By Rebozo Claimed

Charles "Bebe" Rebozo, millionaire friend of President Nixon, did not keep a $100,000 campaign contribution from Howard Hughes in his safe but distributed part of it for the "personal use" of presidential secretary Rose Mary Woods and one of the President's brothers, CBS News reported Saturday.

CBS Washington correspondent Dan Schorr said details of the alleged grant to Miss Woods and Donald Nixon were revealed two weeks ago by former presidential lawyer Herbert Kalmbach in a secret executive session with Sen. Sam Ervin and two staff members of the Senate Watergate Committee "far from Capitol Hill."

"With no other senators present, Herbert Kalmbach made a new allegation he had not told before to the special prosecutor or any other investigators," CBS said.

. "It was, CBS learned today, that President Nixon's friend, Bebe Rebozo did not keep the $100,000 Howard Hughes contribution intact in a safe deposit box as he claimed but turned over part of it to the President's brother, Donald, and his secretary, Rose Mary Woods, for their personal use. Kalmbach said Rebozo told him this at a meeting at the White House last April 30 while seeking his advice on what to do about an Internal Revenue Service investigation of the Hughes donation.

"Kalmbach said Rebozo apparently replaced the missing money and started efforts to return the whole $100,000 to the Hughes organization several months later. Kalmbach testified Rebozo urgently asked him never to disclose what he had told him at the White House. Two days later, Rebozo was questioned by the Watergate Committee in executive session and said he did not recall such a discussion with Kalmbach. He insisted once again that the money had not left his safe deposit box until it was returned," leased a staff report recommending that Nixon pay $476,431 in back taxes and interest and two hours before the White House announced the IRS had already presented the President a slightly smaller bill that he would pay was taped, the committee was in the throes of trying to decide whether to endorse its staff recommendations, and Long made it clear the case was far from closed.

"We will study it." Long said. "His lawyers want to submit additional views. They will either do it in writing or do it verbally...there might be a lot of other lawyers who might want to submit their views on that issue. After we have studied, we will reach a conclusion about the matter.

"At the moment, we have reached no conclusion. That is simply a staff recommendation and a staff study."

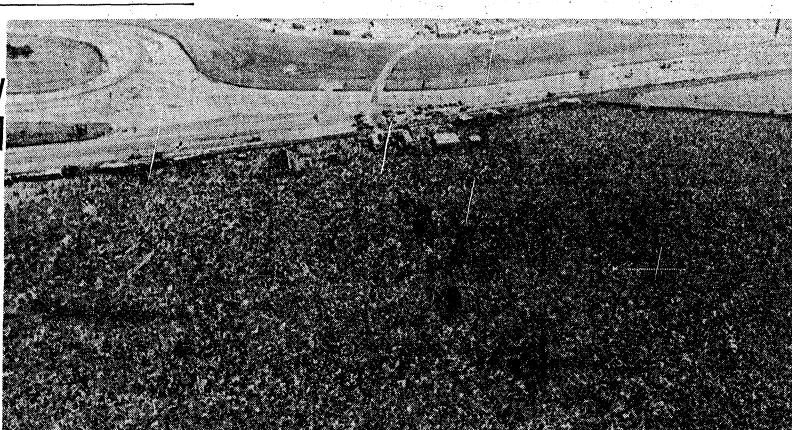

After the White House announced Wednesday evening Nixon would pay the huge tax assessment, the committee voted Thursday morning to take no further action and by a nine to one vote endorsed "most," but not all, of the staff recommendations.

In the interview taped Wednesday afternoon, Long made it clear the committee was looking very carefully at the staff recommendation to disallow Nixon's $482,000 in deductions for his gift of his pre-presidential papers to the nation — by far the biggest item in dispute.

"It would be very difficult for anyone to argue that they (the staff) are very far off or they are wrong on many items," he said. "Of course, the big question is this: are they right on the big item?"

Once the committee decided what to recommend, Long said, Nixon could "do whatever he wants to do about the matter."

But the President did not wait. After the staff report was made public, he revealed he had been given the IRS assessment and said he would not contest it. Though the IRS report has not been made public, it was believed to be a near duplicate of Long's committee staff study.

NY Police Arrest Family On Welfare

NEW YORK (UPI) — Police who raided the house of a Bronx family receiving $16,800 a year in welfare payments said Friday they found:

-$50,000 worth of furnishings including six color television sets.

-$100,000 worth of heroin, cocaine, and other drugs, and policy slips indicating a $5,000 to $7,000 weekly business.

Capt. Thomas O'Connell, commander of the Bronx Narcotics Squad, said officers also recovered a .22 pistol and a .38 service revolver, stolen a year ago from a police locker room.

None of the family resisted arrest, but one policeman was bitten by the dog, O'Connell said.

> The injured guardsmen were identified as Lt. Cormon Forzono, Fairborn, Ohio, treated at Greene County Memorial Hospital for facial burns, and Staff Sgt. William Wolfe, St. Paris, Ohio, treated at the same hospital for hand burns. Both were released after treatment. Meantime, the UPI revised death toll from tornado disasters across the country Wednesday and Thursday stood at 321. Federal officials set the toll at 304 after a twoday survey and estimated the number of homeless at between 60,000 and 70,000.

UPI's breakdown was Alabama 73, Kentucky 71, Tennessee 58, Ohio 40, Indiana 41, Georgia 16, North Carolina 5, Michigan 3, Illinois 2, Virginia 2 and one each in West Virginia and Oklahoma. There were eight dead in Windsor, Ont.

Forty persons were still unaccounted for in Brandenburg, Ky., the hardest hit area of that state. The total confirmed dead in that community was 29.

The federal officials said damage would "run in excess of a half billion dollars."

The survey was made by James T. Lynn, secretary of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), and Thomas Dunne, chief of the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration (FDAA). The two held a news conference in Atlanta upon completion a tour that covered six of the nine affect-Lynn and Dunne toured only those states that have been officially declared disaster areas-Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia.

The fire in Xenia for a time threatened to destroy an entire block of office buildings and stores which had been damaged by the tornado. But it was confined to the threestory furniture store and brought under control within several hours. Cause was not known.

Stone said the guardsmen were part of a patrol during the night to prevent looting in the ravaged town and were using the building as a relief station and to protect them from subfreezing temperatures. He said six guardsmen were in the store when the fire started.

A crane was used to remove collapsed portions of the building so that the guard could search the ruins.

The discovery of two more bodies at Monticello, Ind., lifted the total of that state's dead from Wednesday's tornado onslaught to 41 and the national count to 320.

UPI reporter Richard Walker flew over ravaged Brandenburg, Ky., and reported, "Houses are splintered as if hit by cannon shells." Twenty-nine of the town's 1,700 population are known to be dead. Some are missing - a report common in the towns through the tornado belt.

The death count edged upward. Rescue workers had been searching for the bodies of four persons who were in a van which was swept off a bridge over the Tippecanoe River at Monticello. One of them was found Saturday. The rest were presumed

"Who knows? I've never heard her mention retiring?" How did it all begin? "She says she was supposed to be dancing in a tunic at the Chicago fair, but she ripped it and forgot to mend it. Suddenly it was time to go onstage, so she just chucked the tunic, grabbed some fans and used them to cover up her bareness. She never went back to the tunic, not then, not since and not tonight."

lican nomination in California's gubernatorial race.

In campaign appearances in Southern California Friday he described the circumstances leading to his indictment as "false and flimsy."

He characterized the results of both lie detector tests as "not conclusive one way or another."

The official polygraph test was administered in Sacramento March 14. He had demanded the test after Watergate prosecutors told him there was a possibility of a perjury indictment.

"I don't think there is a question of passing or flunking the tests," Reinecke said.

"You are either reactive or not reactive and I was reactive to questions about the San Diego convention or the ITT. But I was also reactive to my wife's name."

The grand jury perjury charges stem from Reinecke's testimony before a Senate committee investigating his relationship to a $400,000 offer from Sheraton Corp., a subsidiary of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., to help finance the 1972 Republican convention.

The ITT offer was made when the company was seeking a settlement of an antitrust issue with the U.S. Department of Justice, which it eventually obtained.

Libyan Chief Loses Political Command CAIRO (UPI) - Libyan Georges Pompidou and then

Leader Col. Moammar Khadafy has been relieved of his political, administrative and traditional functions but remains supreme commander of the armed forces, the Middle East News Agency said Saturday.

Quoting a verbal memorandum issued by Libya's ruling Revolutionary Command Council, the agency said the duties taken from Khadafy have been assumed by the prime minister, Maj. Abdel Salam Jalloud, No. 2 man in the regime.

The memorandum did not say whether the changes in duties affected Khadafy's position as chairman of the Revolutionary Command Council, a post that makes him chief of state.

There was no indication whether the command's council decision came at the behest of the 32-year-old Khada-

The Egyptian agency report said the memorandum was circulated to foreign diplomatic missions in Tripoli on Friday.

The resolution was dated April 2 —Tuesday.

Political sources said they expected it would take some time to see what the announced changes meant in the leadership of Libya. Since he led a group of young officers in ousting the Libyan monarchy in a bloodless coup Sept. 1, 1969, Khadafy has several times taken unusual steps.

In July 1973, he announced his resignation after the failure of a march on Cairo by Libyan citizens demanding unity with Egypt. But he withdrew the resignation in an emotional speech to a rally of the marchers.

In recent months, Khadafy has been frustrated in atterepts to achieve immediate political unions, first with Egypt and then with Tunisia. He also has been an outspoken critic of President Anwar Sadat's attempt to obtain a negotiated Middle East settle-

Hundreds Flee Forest Blaze In New Mexico

CLOUDCROFT, N.M. (UPI) - Winds gusting up to 60 miles per hour fanned flames through 8,000 acres of Lincoln National Forest Saturday, forcing evacuation of two small towns.

The fire, believed mancaused, erupted 20 miles southeast of this mountain resort. Almost 1,000 men were called to battle the blaze whipped through virgin pine and conifer forest.

"It's really rolling," John Goodwin, a state game and fish department officer said. "I don't think they can get it stopped by Sunday."

Goodwin said 200 to 300 residents of the communities of Weed and Sacramento were forced from their homes. He said there were no injuries but several buildings in both towns were destroyed.

"Its' moving down three canyons in an easterly direction very fast," Goodwin said. "It's burning so hot that it's creating its own winds of up to 60 miles per hour by thermal action."

Two World War II B17 bombers made fire-retardant drops in the afternoon, but were forced to land at nearby Alamogordo when winds became too strong. A helicopter from Holoman Air Force Base tried to aid but also was grounded by the high winds.

Fire crews used ground pumper trucks and bulldozers to fight the flames.

Lou Armijo of the state forestry department said it was believed the fire was started by campers at the Pine Springs Campground. The fire was reported only hours after William D. Hurst, a regional forester, imposed a ban on fire and smoking in the Lincoln National Forest, because of below normal snowfall this

The forms must be completely redone, he said, with elimination of any deductions based on the gift of Nixon's vice presidential papers to the National Archives and also on any expenses incurred in alterations of the properties at Key Biscayne and San Clemente.

With regard to the size tax that Nixon may have to pay on his 1974 income, the source stressed that the matter at this time was theoretical and that Nixon and his tax advisers will have to decide how to proceed.

However, he pointed out that Nixon had voluntarily agreed to pay back taxes owed for the year 1969 although he is not legally required to do so since the statute of limitations has become effective for that year.

The repayment of 1969 taxes -estimated to be in the "ballpark" of $145,000—was in effect, a gift and could be listed as such for deduction purposes so that the tax for 1974 could be nil, the source

State Raises Medi-Cal For Nursing Homes

SACRAMENTO (UPI) -The state will pay higher rates to nursing homes with Medi-Cal patients.

State Health Director William Mayer said Friday the average rate paid by Medi-Cal to nursing home operators will be raised immediately from $15.83 per patient per day to $17.81. It will cost the state an additional $55 million a year.

The Medi-Cal nursing home rates apply only to basic room and board and skilled nursing service.

Mayer said the new rates will be an incentive for nursfacilities and services.

> The Army said the soldier went to his unit's armory and checked out the rifle three hours before he walked into the mess hall, fired "three or four shots" and then walked casually away.

From there he "went to his living area, where he lay on his bunk and fired a shot into his abdomen and chest," according to the post information office at Ft. Leavenworth. He was critically wounded.

Kopanski said in April, about a month before the shooting, Smith was on duty at the top of a tower when he slipped and fell. "Dazed, he reported to the dispensary, where they Xrayed his back, but not his head," Kopanski said. "Despite the fact that he had been badly injured, he was given only first aid care and returned to duty." The defense said it is prepared to present evidence that in the interval between the accident and the slaying of 1st Sgt. Archie D. Carnell, Smith suffered a sharp reversal of personality, but during that time he was offered neither medical care nor psychi-

No Frills, Just Straight Academic Diet At WCU

By JIM BROCK

Register Staff Writer ORANGE - There's no sprawling campus, no football field, no fraternities or sororities, and no proms or cheerleaders.

Even "streakers" have difficulty locating the small Orange County campus of West Coast University (WCU) in the Union Bank Square, La Veta and Main streets.

"We get a straight academic diet. . .no frills," said George B. Locke, Tustin, a retired Marine Corps master sergeant who graduated from WCU last June.

Locke, 37, received two bachelor of science degreesone in applied mathematics and the other in computer

Currently, he is completing required courses for a master's degree in financial management while working as quality assurance manager for Standard Industries, 5900 Dale St., Buena Park, an aerospace hardware subcontractor.

He talked about last February's retirement from the Marine Corps and his move into private industry.

"It's a completely new ballpark for me," he said. "Instead of orders, now I give recommendations, to four test technicians and six production assemblers."

Locke said the university helped him retrain for private life.

"There were no extra-curricular student activities. It was all business. The material was presented in about half of the time allotted at full-size universities or colleges."

"It's not easy. You must study. Paying for the units does not buy a grade," he said.

He is not through with his education. "My next goal is a doctorate degree in law. That's in next year's plan, however."

Locke is the typical student at the Orange campus of the university, explains Frederick Mintz, vice president for planning and development.

cials said Saturday the refusal of the U.S. House of Representatives to increase military aid to South Vietnam could endanger the government in Saigon if a much-predicted Communist offensive materializes.

The House action highlighted a running disagreement between the U.S. military-diplomatic establishment here, which wants to keep American military aid flowing full blast, and the U.S. Congress, where pressure is growing to cut it back. Col. Vo Dong Giang, spokesman for the Viet Cong truce delegation in Saigon, said that in his opinion "the United States does not want to put a complete end to the fighting here."

Allied officials said South Vietnam is getting enough military assistance to keep up the present relatively low level of fighting but would be in trouble if the communists start a general offensive.

These officials said American military aid has been running well below the onefor-one replacement formula specified in the Jan. 28, 1973. cease-fire agreement.

But while he's enthusiastic about that, he believes the district's EH program is headed for major problems.

The state won't pay costs for more than the 2 per cent enrollment limit, and the district's financial situation has dashed any hopes Berry might have had that trustees would agree to boost local financial support.

So Berry said he is faced with a program that can only

The state school code defines an educationally handicapped minor as one who cannot benefit from the regular school program because of neurological or emotional disorders. A neurological handicap doesn't mean the student is mentally retarded, Berry said. The impairment is a brain-nervous system malfunction generally affecting speech, hearing and sight. The disability can be li-

Oil Production Cut Back 5% By Venezuela

CARACAS (UPI) — Venezuela, single largest source of U.S. oil imports, announced Saturday an almost five per cent cutback in its output-150,000 barrels per day—for conservation purposes.

Mines Minister Valentin Hernandez said that the cutback was aimed at reducing loss of natural gas that is now being flared, or burned off.

Venezuelan oil production this week was at 3,220,090 barrels per day, almost 70,000 barrels per day less than the same period last year.

The South American producer is the world's third exporter, shipping 1.8 million barrels per day to U.S. mar-

Hernandez said that the cutback would be spread out among the nation's almost two dozen producing firms, including the state oil company, and would not affect exports.

Industry sources saw the move as the first step in carrying out new oil policies by the government of President Carlos Andres Perez who took office March 12.

Perez and members of his government have stressed the need to conserve natural gas reserves for use in petrochemical and metal industries here. At present about twothirds of all the gas produced in the country is used, but the rest is burned off due to lack of facilities for its utilization.

"Legislation won't do it: it has to come from society. Legislation helps, but you can't legislate tolerance." Asked what would happen if

2 Groups Offer $500,000 For Nixon VP Files

DALLAS (UPI) - Two Texas-based groups who support President Nixon offered Saturday to buy his vice presidential papers for $500,000 to get him out of a tax jam.

Otis Davenport, a Dallas real estate broker, said the groups made the offer through the Washington office of George Bush, national Republican chairman.

Nixon donated his vice presdential papers to the National Archives and took a large tax deduction. After the Internal Revenue Service and a Congressional committee said he owed almost $500,000 in back taxes, Nixon promised to pay. Citizens started fund drives to raise money to pay the taxes, but Nixon has said he would pay every penny himself and send back any dona-

4 Safeguards Outlined For Nuclear Power

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Ford Foundation study on nuclear power had the following recommendations to the Atomic Energy Commission for making use of nuclear power safer:

-Come up with "a detailed system of safeguards" for each stage of the nuclear fuel production cycle based on "the best available technology and institutional mechanisms." The report said political and bureaucratic indifference was the biggest obstacle to an effective system.

—Consider setting up a federal nuclear security agency with sole responsibility for protecting atomic materials.

-Develop a review system for physical security plans submitted by the power industry.

—Initiate discussions with other governments with substantial nuclear power programs with the aim of developing a common security policy.

highly-enriched uranium, the stuff that goes into the explosive core of atomic bombs. Within a few years, they added, "tens of thousands of kilograms of these fissionable materials will be flowing through the U.S. nuclear power industry."

"A few kilograms (20 to 50 pounds) of these fissionable materials are enough to make a bomb of mass destruction," the report said, "and a few grams of plutonium (2 to 3 ounces) if effectively dispersed as airborne particles, could be a deadly radioactive danger in a widespread area."

Based on nuclear data available to the public, they said, "a few persons, possibly even one person working alone, who possessed about 10 kilograms of plutonium oxide and a substantial amount of chemical high explosive could, within several weeks, design and build a crude fission bomb.

Taylor and Willrich defined a crude bomb as one with a probable yield of 100 tons of TNT and a possible yield of as much as a few kilotons. In a typical suburban residential area, they said, such a weapon "might kill 2,000 people, most by exposure to radioactive fallout."

Set off in a parking garage beneath a skyscraper, the same bomb could kill as many as 50,000 people and destroy the entire building.

Slaying Trial

The attorney said all the physicians treating Smith recommended he be retained at the hospital and any criminal proceedings be transferred to the United States.

But instead "Smith was taken from the hospital by Army authorities without the permission of his doctors or his family. He was sent back to Vietnam and confined to an isolation cell at Da Nang for eight months. During this period he received no medical care and as a result his wounds did not heal properly."

However, an army sanity board found Smith sane and he was tried before a general court martial that sentenced him to life imprisonment.

An appeal overturned the decision on what Kopanski calls technical grounds but which the Army said was "the sole contested issue—the sanity of the accused."

Laos Coalition

History has not been kind to coalition governments in Laos. Should this one fail like its predecessors, war could once again descend on the weary Laotians, hundreds of thousands of whom have lost their homes and families in nearly two decades of fighting.

There is a third possibility. Should the pro-Communist Pathet Lao party gain the ascendancy, Laos would most likely go the way of North Vietnam.

The United States has almost completely pulled out of Laos militarily. It is unlikely to come back in no matter what way Laos goes.

Reducing Shots Stir Dispute

Many Weight Losers Praise Treatment; AMA Finds Fault

FARMINGTON, Mich. (UPI) — In this slim-oriented, diet conscious society where trim executives nab promotions and svelte females catch the men, fat is definitely not where it's at.

And that's where HCG comes in.

The HCG Glandular Program—the initials stand for a hormone called Human Chorionic Gonadotrophin—promises a weight loss of up to 12 ounces a day.

The main attractions of the diet are quick results and a kind of euphoric, well-fed feeling reported by most patients—the result of a series of daily injections of the hormone.

The HCG program is a highly controversial one in medical circles.

Though it has the support of many members of the American Society of Bariatric Physicians, a group of doctors who treat obesity, it does not have the endorsement of the American Medical Association.

An AMA spokesman in Chicago said the program is not recommended by the AMA for use in weight reduction because it has not been established as safe or effective. University of Michigan medical authorities regard it as possibly "a dangerous use of an extremely powerful hormone."

HCG is produced by a woman's body during pregnancy to convert the extra fat into a source of energy, and many doctors claim it triggers the same reaction in obese patients.

Only in the past several years has the program really caught on — first among Hollywood starlets and later among ordinary housewives anxious to lose weight.

At a small clinic in Farmington, two doctors who have been using the program since 1963 estimate they have treated as many as 10,000 men and women ouring that time.

"The HCG program is not THE answer to the weight problem, but it's a good way to begin from both the physical and psychological approaches," said Dr. Paul Parente, 43, a former chubby himself.

"Diets are usually a very slow, drawn out process but with this method, results can be seen very quickly," Parente said, "and that's a highly (Continued On Page A9)

Reducing Shots

Parente and his partner, Dr. A. J. Scharchilli, administer the program at the Farmington Medical Center, about 20 miles outside Detroit. They began testing the HCG method on a limited basis after trying it on themselves first.

From a trial group of 50 patients, their practice grew to the point where the clinic waiting room is often standing room only six days a week.

Prices vary around the county, but the average fee for the HCG program at the Farmington clinic runs under $200. This includes blood tests, nutritional analysis and 23 injections.

Along with the shots patients must follow a strict but well balanced 500-calorie diet. with even certain shampoos and deodorants forbidden.

Parente explains how the program works:

"As the body takes in protein it goes through many reactions and break in the process may cause the body to convert the intake to fat. HCG tends to affect the nerve bridge between the brain and the hormonal system which controls the shape of the body. The hormone tends to bring the body shape into the pattern of normally functioning pituitary glands."

Weight loss results recorded by patients utilizing the program have been gramatic.

Parente recalled one woman who weighed 348 pounds and would not leave her home except to drive to the clinic for her daily injection.

"At the end of a year on the program," Parente said, "that woman dropped to a weight of 160 pounds and now she's flying off to Florida and Las Vegas all the time."

Parente believes the injections are excellent stabilizers for weight problems, as well as other disorders of the

"The shots are non-toxic and do not overstimulate the body like amphetamines," he said. "They're also ideal for hypertension to bring the biood pressure down and good for cutting down insulin in the treatment of diabetes."

As with all diets involving some form of human willpower, failures must be expected and Parente admits that it sometimes gets discouraging.

"It's just a matter of getting the person to realize that he has to control his weight problem the rest of his life. He can't come in here and lose a lot of weight and then go back to the same bad eating habits." But the words of one woman who lost 50 pounds on the program affirm, for Parente, its basic attraction, regardless of some of the medical questions raised.

"I was a fat, ugly nothing before I started taking those shots every day," says Linda Fox, a 26-year-old school teacher. "It changed my whole life. Now I look forward to each new day."

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Working quietly behind closed doors, members of a House Agriculture subcommittee have tentatively agreed on reform steps designed to strengthen government regulations for thousands of workers in sugar cane and beet fields, it was learned Satur-

Sources close to the panel, which is drafting an extension of the federal sugar control program, said the changes would apply to a long-standing section of the program under which the Agriculture Department sets minimum wages for sugar field workers.

Spokesmen for the workers, including Rep. William D. Ford, D-Mich, had called for a long series of changes in the labor terms of the act. Among other complaints, critics charged that under the existing administrative system, decisions on wage floors and on worker-employer disagreements are made by Agriculture Department officials who work closely with growers and tend to favor their inter-

In an attempt to meet those complaints, a source said the subcommittee has decided take the job of processing wage-setting cases away from the Department's farmer-oriented Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS). Under the proposed legislation, the job would be handled by the Department's semi-independent corps of Administrative Law Judges.

Wage recommendations by the judges would still have to go to the Secretary of Agriculture for a final ruling. But in another new departure, the proposed bill would allow workers to appeal secretarial decisions to federal courts in their own home areas.

Procedures for handling individual disputes between workers and sugar farmers also would be revised under the plan. Instead of turning those over to local ASCS farmer committees as in the past, they would be heard by attorneys assigned from Agriculture's Office of General Counsel. Decisions by these attorneys could be reviewed by the Department's Judicial Officer and could be appealed to federal courts.

Subcommittee sources said they did not know whether Ford and others pushing for

Contract OKd Minutes Before Strike By UAL

CHICAGO (UPI) - United Air Lines maintained normal schedules Saturday while awaiting union ratification of a new contract worked out only minutes before the strike deadline.

The air carrier had been prepared to cancel some, if not all, flights as the company and officials of the International Association of Mechanics and Aerospace Workers met into the early morning hours. A strike would have halted United operations at 113 airports in the United States and Canada.

No details of the agreement were announced pending ratification by the IAMAW members. A union spokesman said the members would vot e on the pact "within the next 10 days."

The mechanics' contract covering 16,576 United employes expired Aug. 31, 1973. They continued working without a contract but had set a strike deadline of 12:01 a.m, Saturday. The deadline was extended for six more hours as union and company negotiators reported they were nearing agreement, aided by federal mediators in Washington.

The tentative settlement came 90 minutes before the union was set to walk out. The union covers United mechanics, ramp workers and persons handling food services aboard the planes.

Issues in dispute were wages and certain holiday and vacation benefits. A company spokesman said the union negotiators had agreed to recommend the tentative settlement to their members.

A strike would have idled 47,800 employes of United. The airline operates 1,350 flights daily carrying some 89,000 passengers.

Mormon Elders OK Kimball As 12th 'Prophet'

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (UPI) - The elders of the Mormon church Saturday sustained Spencer W. Kimball, a 79-year-old survivor of throat cancer and open heart surgery, as their 12th "prophet, seer and revelator."

With upraised right hands. 8,000 of the 3.3-million member church's priesthood holders and members approved Kimball's selection as church president to succeed Harold B. Lee who cied last Decem-

The rites took place during a "solemn assembly" in the silver-domed tabernacle on temple square while two dozen Indian protesters huddled in the rain outside in a 24hour vigil.

The demonstrators, from the American Indian Movement (AIM), demanded a conference with Kimball to request a $1 million annual donation for Indian self-help programs. The church issued a statement during the conference defending its treatment of Indians. It said it donated more than $3.3 millon annually to them.

Inside the tabernacle, Kimball pledged to "serve you and love you and do our utmost to guide you to your righteous, glorious destiny."

Kimball, who speaks in a raspy voice from a 1957 throat cancer operation and who underwent open heart surgery two years ago, has headed the church since Dec. 30, 1973, four days after Lee's death.

Church members sustained him on the 144th anniversary of the founding of the faith.

Tugs Towing Crippled Liner To Bermuda

HAMILTON, Bermuda (UPI) — The crippled luxury liner Queen Elizabeth 2 was towed by two tugs toward Bermuda Saturday night to repair damage which forced her to abort a Caribbean cruise in mid-Atlantic and, transfer her passengers to ans other ship.

The 65,800-ton Queen must await arrival here from Britain of 30 boiler tubes to replace those damaged when a fuel leak caused a breakdown Monday of all three of the vessel's boilers, leaving her dead in the water 275 miles southwest of Bermuda. Her 1,640 passengers were transferred Wednesday to the Norwegian cruise ship Sea Venture, which brought them to Hamilton from where they were flown to New York. Tugs reached the drifting QE2 at midafternoon Friday, attached lines and began the slow voyage to Hamilton." Cunard Line, owners of the vessel, hoped repairs could be completed in time for the ship to return to New York and begin her first trans-Atlantic" voyage of the season April 16."

fuel conservation and skyrocketing gas prices, one idea worth its weight in octane would be a new way of moving people.

Overland Industries, a recreational vehicle manufacturer, has come up with just such an idea.

It's called the Overland Stage, a mini-bus designed to move small groups of people at low cost. The small-scale bus accommodates 15 to 18 people in comfort and style, according to Overland's president Dave Henry.

Nixon Declares April 'Cancer Control Month'

President Nixon recently proclaimed April as "Cancer Control Month," declaring he is convinced that although "victory may come by inches" cancer eventually will be conquered.

The President, in signing the proclamation in the Cabinet room, declared:

"In the past, we have learned to cope with and cure other, equally frightening illnesses. With years of research, we have virtually eliminated such plagues as diphtheria, cholera, smallpox, and typhus. And we are going to conquer cancer.

"The struggle will be long, difficult, and costly, and the victory may come by inches. But it will come."

Benno Schmidt, chairman of the President's cancer panel established in 1971, said:

"I do not expect to see the day when all cancer will be eliminated from our society or to the extent that polio has been eliminated. Cancer is many diseases. We will make progress against many forms of it. The American people must make a long term committment, and not a moon shot or Manhattan Project type of committment."

Schmidt said that the amount of money being spent on cancer control and cancer research by the federal government has increased from $180 million in 1970, to $589 million in 1974 and a projected $600 million in 1975.

Buick Returns V-6 Engine To 1975 Lineup

FLINT, Mich. — Buick Motor Division has announced that it will build a V-6 engine in Flint for introduction in its smaller sized cars in 1975.

George R. Elges, general manager of Buick and vice president of General Motors, said the engine would be produced on a machine tool line which Buick sold six years ago when it discontinued production of the original V-6 in 1968. General Motors concluded negotiations to repurchase the equipment from American Motors Corp. early last week.

"This will enable Buick to introduce its own six-cylinder engine in the 1975 model lineup," Elges said.

Elges added that the engine had been designed to accommodate a new intake manifold and would have a slightly larger displacement. It also will be equipped with a catalytic converter to meet the 1975 emission standards and will be offered with a new carburetor and high energy ignition system.

"In terms of performance and fuel economy, it is a considerably improved design. over the V-6 engine Buick offered before," Elges said. Elges explained that the repurchased tooling was used originally to produce a 225 cubic inch V-6 engine for Buick Specials. The tooling had been in storage in an AMC plant in Toledo and will be transferred to Flint for installation in the Buick engine plant. Elges said the foundations for the V-6 engine line were still intact in the engine plant.

"They can be uncovered and cleaned up quickly so we can start putting the equipment in place very shortly." he added. "This will enable Buick to get into production with a V-6 engine in a few months instead of waiting two years for new machine tools to be built."

Buick engineers already have cars equipped with V-6 engines running on Environmental Protection Agency certification tests at the GM proving ground at Milford, Mich., Elges added.

Services Set For SA Writer Nina Morris

Nina Harrod Morris, voice teacher and writer, and a resident of Santa Ana for the past 32 years, died Saturday in her home.

She was a contributor of political verse to newspapers and periodicals throughout the country, and her autobiographical novel, "Make Way For Grandpa," is on the Santa Ana Library shelf, Inspiration for her book came as a student of creative writing under the late Lota Blythe at Santa Ana College. Mrs. Morris attended United Church and was a past president of Women of Unity.

Mrs. Morris was a native of Winfield, Kan., where her parents were pioneers and where she met and married James E. "Joe" Morris, who became a Santa Ana realtor and resides at 1015 N. Broadway, Santa Ana. The couple would have celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary on Sept. 16 of this year. Mrs. Morris was active as a voice teacher for more than 30 vears in Kansas and for awhile after she came to Santa Ana in 1942. She was known for her appearances in programs of music and original verse.

The Morrises had two children, James Harrod Morris (Ensign, USNR), who died during World War II in 1943, and Ernestine Schinoler. Mrs. Schindler and her husband, Major Homer B. Schindler, USAF Ret., now residing in Tacoma, Wash., were formerly residents of Santa Ana.

Mrs. Morris is also survived by her grandsons, Peter B. Schindler of Tacoma and U.S Air Force Capt. James C. Schindler and his wife Karen, of Lubbock, Tex., and a great grandson, Christopher James Schindler of Lubbock; cousins, Helen Mabee Alderson of Long Beach and Lila Bolack of Winfield; and a sister-inlaw, Mrs. Mano Morris of Winfield, Kans.

Arrangements are being handled by Brown Mortuary, where friends may call on Tuesday from 10 a.m.-9 p.m. Burial will be in Winfield,

The family has asked those who wish to make make contributions to the Morris Memorial Music Fund of Southwestern College, Winfield, Kan. 67156, sent in care of Ross Williams.

Helicopter Saves 15 On Freighter

SAN JUAN, P.R. (UPI)—A U.S. Coast Guard helicopter rescued 15 men Friday who had been stranded on a grounded freighter for more than a week off the south coast of the Dominican Republic.

Each of the men was lifted, individually from the 8,962-ton British-registered ship Mercury to the little town of Cabo Rojo in the Dominican Republic. The operation took 90 minutes.

The Coast Guard said 12 of the men were Trinidadian crew members on the Mercury and the other three were members of the crew of the tug, Curb, which had been trying for more than a week to refloat the Mercury.

The Coast Guard said the Curb asked for help after reporting that bad weather prevented it either from floating the grounded freighter or getting near enough to supply food and other essentials to the crew.

Bus Gunfight Leaves 2 Dead

OAKLAND (UPI)—Two quarreling men aboard an AC Transit bus suddenly pulled guns Friday and killed each other.

Police said James Jackson, 55, and Hozell Lewis, 71, were arguing as they boarded the eastbound bus on Seventh Street. Witnesses said the two sat on opposite sides of the aisle and continued their quarrel.

"You're so conceited," they said Lewis told Jackson.

dio impairments - they hear, but the sounds that register aren't the sounds actually being made. A speaker says "the," and the neurologically handicapped student hears and repeats - "erg."

Or a student might have a sight problem; the classic, and rarest example being sight reversal. The brain registers a mirror image of everything the eyes focus on. "The" comes out "eht."

Many speech impediments, including stuttering and lisping, also are caused by neurological or emotional disorders, Berry said.

In addition, conditions such as hyperactivity and hypoactivity are many times traced to a combination of emotional disorder and neurological impairment.

The EH program here, said Berry, is designed to "break through or get around" the disorders that create learning disabilities.

It's remedial schooling, he said, aimed at giving students the special help they need to get back in the regular class-needs of the mature, fully-employed adult. Through innovations in course presentation, the university has made it possible for this average student to obtain an undergraduate degree in five years-by just attending night classes."

Huggins said the average night student must attend classes for 12 to 15 years to accomplish the same goal.

"About 70 per cent of our students complete their programs in even less time than that, however," he said. "Usually they have transfer credits for work done in other colleges and universities."

The academic year begins at the Orange center in November. It is composed of six 8-week "trimester halfterms," with two weeks off at Christmas and during the summer.

The university does not operate under an endowment, Huggins explained. "There are no outside funds. We are a "pay-as-you-go' institution."

The tuition rate is $42 per unit for undergraduate work, and $46 per unit for graduate courses.

Undergraduate programs include a bachelor of science degree in administration, computer science, engineering, applied mathematics and applied physics. The graduate program provides master degrees in applied mathematics, computer science, environmental science, management science and systems engineering. What does industry think of the school?

"This is my first experience hiring a graduate from the university," said Ross Reed. 59, owner of the firm where Locke works. "Locke has been a good addition to our team."

Locke himself thanks the Marine Corps for his opportunity to fit into a private industry slot after retirement.

He didn't graduate from high school. "I was a dropout," he explained. Through the Corps, Locke took classes to complete his high school work, and went on to special electronic schools for technical training.

He began his training at the Orange County campus in 1966. Classes were set aside for a tour of duty in Vietnam from 1968 to 1969. He returned to classes in 1969.

Before retirement, Locke was teaching mathematics in the Marine Corps' equivalent to high school.

"I think back to the day I left home on my 14th birthday, and wonder at what has happened over the years," he

The 2 per cent rule means the state will provide funding, at approximately $1,200 per student each year, for only students completely out of the special classes.

Admitting there's nothing that can be done next year, Berry said he's watching "very closely" a lawsuit challenging the 2 per cent limit filed by the San Mateo and South San Francisco school districts.

In addition, the Fountain Valley Elementary School District is soliciting the support of other districts in a letter of opposition to be filed with the state.

Santa Ana trustees here have not acted on the Fountain Valley request, although it was submitted nearly a month ago.

The overall EH program. troubles are compounded at Diamond Daignostic Center where two EH classes have participated in a federally tax-funded bilingual program.

The $52,000 Title VII grant that has provided three bilingual Spanish-English staff members on a full time basis, plus half the salaries for a nurse and a speech therapist, ends this year.

Title VII director Leo Cardona said federal program officials recommended that the grant not be reapplied for because the money we get should be used strictly for bilingual, bicultural programs in regular classes."

One Diamond spokesman said 12 of the 30 EH children in the program are Spanishspeaking, and he fears the end of the program "will be a big setback for them, since they'll have the dual handicap of their disabilities plus tyring to get along strictly in English."

That, too, said Berry, is a situation that apparently will not be solved this year because of the district's financial status.

To help cut district costs next year, Berry said he's proposing a 1974-75 EH program that would:

- Eliminate the $73,000 busing budget, transferring that money to EH instructional uses:

- Eliminate the eight LDG classes and transfer those teachers to EH classes; - Add eight more EH teachers to the payroll;

- Eliminate half the 28 program aides:

- Reduce expenditures for student materials by $15 per pupil.

The changes Berry has proposed would boost the number of EH classes from 28 to 44 next year, while eliminating

"That will hurt," he said, "and the loss of half our aides will really hurt, but we've got

During the 1972-73 school year, according to district controller Pat Browning, the EH program budget was $913,000, with the state contributing $420,000 and district tax revenues accounting for $493,000. Enrollment in the program included 450 EH students and 187 LDG pupils.

This year, he said, enrollment figures are about the same, but the budget dropped to $646,000 and while the total is not yet available, state funds are expected to account for a larger portion of the budget.

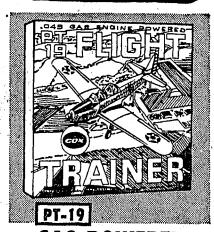

Eliminating the LDG sessions and transferring the teachers to EH programs next year, he said, will provide an additional $20,800 to the 1974-75 program.

That, plus the $73,000 transferred form busing, increased ADA revenue and another $20,800 obtained by staffing eight new EH classes, said Berry, is expected to put the program in "decent" shape next year.

They'll Go Early For Hot Cookout

A picnic isn't a real picnic unless you make it a cookout. Bacon, eggs and potatoes fried over a wood fire and coffee boiled in a bucket. Now, that's top picnic chow. My wife, Jo, and I went on our first outing to Irvine Park in years last Sunday. We paid our four-bits parking fee and sat at a table under a spreading oak tree to eat our townbought hamburgers and drink our colas.

"Not bad," I said, "but let's go early next time and take along the ingredients and equipment for a cookout."

She agreed to it, "If it's not too culd."

Then she remembered we'd "have to go before the weather gets too hot."

You think I'm not married to an outdoors-woman?

About as much as she's married to an outdoors-man. The last time I slept under the stars was on a fishing trip in East Texas when I was 21. And that was 35 years ago.

Any kind of get-up goes at picnics but Jo and I were amused by a mother dishing up food at one of the tables.

She was barefooted, attired in shorts and halter-and wore false eyelashes an inch

They and their young son, Dennis-who is now a catcher for Kansas City-Omaha-settled in a trailer house.

"We parked it on a farm near town," says Norma, "because there were no trailer parks in those days." One afternoon when Jacknow with the California Angels in group sales and the speakers bureau-was at the ball park, the skies suddenly got dark.

Lightning flashed, thunder crashed, the winds howled, and rain fell in torrents.

Norma says the lightning started some fires, and sirens began to wail. "The war was still fresh on my mind, and I thought we were being bombed," she said.

The trailer was vibrating so hard that she was afraid it was about to fall apart. So she and Dennis dived into the closet and shut the door.

The thunder and wind and rain were so loud that when Jack came home and started calling for them, they didn't hear him.

Searching the trailer from one end to the other, he yanked open the closet door and found them cowering on

Reducing Brought Them Together, Biking Keeps Them Going bike ride—which led to a romance on wheels. They will trailblaze the transcontinental course for the Bike-centennial committee, which will sponsor bike tours on the route in 1976.

By TRISH HUETHER Register Staff Writer

Biking was not the thing that got Jim and Linda's romance rolling, although it is now their favorite pastime. Really, it was their own fat. Not fault, but

When asked, "When did you meet?," Linda Thorpe's reply was, "Monday at 4 p.m. in Garden Grove." That was the weight reducing class Linda enrolled in last fall. A heavy guy named Jim Richardson from Santa Ana was the only male in the class.

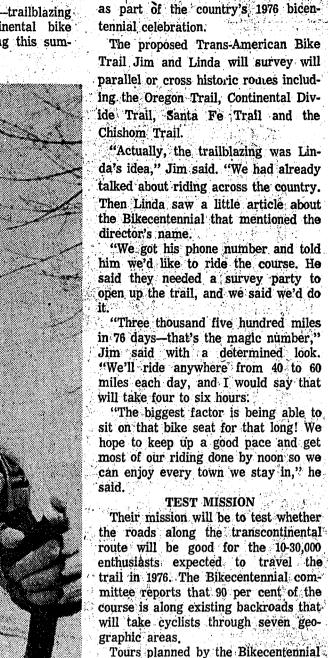

"The first thing I asked you," she said looking at Jim, "was, 'How much have you lost?' What else do you make conversation about in a class like that?"

Jim, now a six-foot-one-inch trim 179 after losing 74 pounds, added, "Our first date was a bike ride, and slowly but surely we've been falling in love. As the pounds come off we find there's more to love even though there's less

That first date progressed into weekend cycling trips, a climb up to Mt. Baldy Village on bikes and rides back and forth from Santa Ana to San mittee reports that 90 per cent of the course is along existing backroads that will take cyclists through seven geographic areas. Tours planned by the Bikecentennial.

Their newest adventure—trailblazing a 3,500 mile, transcontinental bike route in 76 days beginning this sum-

committee will include overnight facilities and meals. Jim and Linda will report back to planners what areas need hotel and camping facilities built before the tours begin in 1976. Some tours will include the entire route while others will take in only parts of the trail. Linda said that in May she and Jim will start their peddling trek in Reedsport, Ore., and will camp along the way or stay in homes offered to them. They will end their journey in the historic triangle of Williamsburg, Yorktown and Jamestown, Va. "When we get to the Rockies we'll go much slower!" Jim said. There's more to enjoy, right? But if a cyclist knows his equipment pretty well he can even cross mountains."

Another couple will leave from Virginia in May and will meet them along RETURN BY AIR

"And we'll fly back from Williams-burg," Jim said, "because we need to get back for school." He is a third-year student at Pepperdine School of Law in Anaheim and Linda is a geology grad student at Cal State Long Beach. (Linda peddles back and forth to classes from her home in Santa Ana, and has lost 20 pounds from her five-foot-eightinch frame since her dieting and biking days began).

Still losing weight, the "bikeys" (they're people who are really into biking, Jim said) plan to stay on their diets while crossing the country.

"We know one person who gained 27 pounds in his ride across the U.S., and he did it in five weeks," Jim said. "We don't want to get to the end and have our bikes collapse under us from our weight. Then we would have to go to a weight reducing class and repent of our sins."

Any prospect of marriage in the future? Jim and Linda looked at each other and laughed. "Well, I haven't proposed to her and she hasn't proposed to me," Jim said: "But I'm sure that will happen eventually.

"I'm sure we'll take our honeymoon on bikes," Linda added. "And maybe we could get married on them."

Children Discover Reading Can Be Fun Through RIF

By REBECCA SORDELET Register Staff Writer

He was afraid to take it home because his mother might think he stole

That was what the young boy answered when Carol Turk and Linda Schwartz told him that the book he had been looking through was his if he wanted it. Other children in the room excitedly asked, "Mine? To KEEP?" When they were all assured that the books were theirs with no strings attached, they hastily wrote their names on the inside covers.

Most of these children never had a book of their very own, a book that they had picked out themselves. Now they owned a treasure even more precious than they realized. They owned keys that could open up new vistas for them.

That's what RIF, Reading Is Fundamental, is all about—opening doors to new vistas early in the lives of underprivileged children in this country who read poorly because they lack exposure to a wide selection of interesting, relevant material.

Founded in 1966 by Mrs. Robert McNamara, wife of the former secretary of defense, the non-profit, tax-exempt organization now operates on a nationwide scale, attempting to demonstrate that books are as essential to children everywhere as paper, pen and

LOCAL PROGRAM

Carol and Linda, two Tustin residents who are attempting to get the program started in Orange County, believe, as do other RIF proponents, that if children are given the opportunity to own a book, a book that they have been allowed to choose themselves, they may be awakened to a joyous discovery that could change the course of their lives—the discovery that reading is fun.

"The purpose of RIF is not to teach children to read," said Carol, "The idea is to motivate them. The system is simple—we hold book distributions every few months for children kindergarten through sixth grade where we supply them with new paperbacks that they can keep."

At the first distribution, which was held Feb.-15 in Santa Ana Community Services Center, 35 children from Monte Vista Elementary School in Santa Ana, selected as the most deserving by school officials, were presented books. "The children were all very excited. One little girl asked me to pick out the book with the most words in it for her," she said.

SERVES LOW-INCOME

Linda added that "the program tends to serve poverty level children. but that doesn't necessarily mean they have to be on welfare. Low income is a better word to describe the level."

The goal for the first year, according to the two women, is to supply five paperbacks for each of 160 children. "In order to give books to 160 children, we will need about $800. This is the minimum yearly goal we set up when we started," Linda said.

Each local group is entirely responsible for raising their own funds. The two Tustinites are planning several fund raising ventures such as a boutique, speaker programs and cake sales, but what they are really looking for are private donations from spon-

"We are looking for people or organizations with a little money who would like to help sponsor the program," they said. "A person donating $25 is buying about 40 books. That is very tangible evidence of what you're money is going for."

FUNDING VARIED Some of the programs already in existence are funded through various sources including Title I (National Education Act), local businesses, organizations such as The American Association of University Women, Urban League, women's clubs and PTAs.

In 1966, when the pilot program was begun in Washington, D.C., funds were derived from several foundation grants and help was offered by a group of dedicated volunteers. The sponsoring agency was the D.C. Citizens for Better Public Education and, while emphasis was placed on reaching elementary school children in the inner-city ghettos, RIF also reached out into the community and made books available to teenagers, adults and pre-schoolers.

"We hope to extend our program to include pre-schoolers next year. We believe very strongly in the Head Start program," said Carol.

Actress To Hostess Luncheon

PATRONESS LUNCHEON-Adoption Guild of Southern Orange County will hold its 13th annual champagne luncheon Monday, April 22, honoring the Guild's 93 patronesses. The noon luncheon will be held in the Newport Beach home of Claire Trevor, (Mrs. Milton Bren), academy award winning actress. The Bren home is noted for its extensive art collection, which includes many original works by Mrs. Bren. Patroness chairman Mrs. Guy Earl III and her assistants Mmes. Al Auer and James Keefe along with Adoption Guild president Mrs. Tom Doan, will be on hand to greet guests at the door. All contributions will go to support the non-sectarian work of placement and counseling by the Holy Family Services. The Guild raised over $18,000 last year with the annual Tennis Tournament and Tennis Ball. This year the events will be held the last two weeks in May and the first week in June, respectively. Going over plans for the luncheon are, from left, Mrs. Doan, Mrs Earl III and Mrs. Bren (Claire Trevor).

Erma Bombeck She Attacks Math Experts

As Saboteurs

You mark my word. Mathematicians won't rest until they've ripped the American family structure to shreds.

First, it was modern math and no one has to be told the rivalry, the bitterness and the malice it left in its wake. Brothers turned against brothers. Wives drove husbands from their beds. And grandparents were put afloat on icebergs never to be seen

The ignorance gap that the new math created between parent and child has not even begun to mend when now they are going to convert the country to the metric system. Do you have any idea what that means?

A yard will become a meter; a quart, a liter; a mile, a kilometer; a grain, a gram; and heaven only knows what my waist measurement will be when this whole mess is over.

I remember how it used to be before my children suffered smart attacks. I knew the answers to so many things I used to get headaches, and then one afternoon my daughter was pouring over a book and asked, "Mama, what's a variable?"

I snatched the book from here, "It's a weirdo who hangs around playgrounds. Where did you get this

"It's my new math book," she said. "I was hoping you could help me." I turned to a page at random and saw: log 10 (5.39 x 10 -3)

"They want me to locate the mantissa in the body of the table and determine the associated antilog 10, and write the characteristics as an exponent on the base of 10," she explained. "How long has the mantissa been missing?" I asked. She went to her room, locked her door and I never saw her again until she graduated. The metric system will be no better, Once a child knows that a square millimeter is .00155 square inches, will he have respect for a Mother who once measured the bathroom for carpeting and had enough left over to slipcover

New Jersey? Already the trouble has started. "The metric system isn't hard to understand," said my son. "An inch

Now - an organic hair remover

Hair's off in minutes, stays off for weeks.

Leaves skin beautifully smooth. free from hair . . . without shaving, waxing, using smelly creams or foams or resorting to electrolysis.

There is now a way to remove unwanted hair from face, arms, thighs and legs, and keep it off longer. You use a gentle, odorless, organic compound, called Delila, and the results are simply great.

Delila actually lifts out the whole hair from the follicle...leaves your skin beautifully smooth and free from hair for weeks.

The little extra time Delila may take at first won't matter once you find you can really forget about hair removal ... yes, for weeks.

There are no blunt ends. No prickly stubble, no nicks or cuts. And there's no quick grow back as there is using razors or creamy or foamy depilatories. When hair eventually comes in, it seems sparser

TEN COMMANDMENTS

For the small sum of three dollars you can help us accomp-lish our objective of placing the TEN COMMANDMENTS on the wall of very home and office in AMERICA.

YES. For that small amount we will send you an attractive reproduc-tion of the TEN COMMAND-MENTS quite suitable for framing. We all need to be reminded that God has never even suggested there has been any change in those simple rules He laid down for us many centuries ago. This is a relatively indirect way of reminding ourselves and others of His rules. The ARTISTIC REPRODUCTION is printed on Parchment Paper to fit available frames. It is very attractive and is evident from a distance. Your family and friends will appreciate its appearance as it hangs

We all know that the observance of these commandments is the one way to internal peace. Join our efforts TODAY to return America to the rules found in the TEN COMMANDMENTS by ordering this reproduction. Send your name and address on a slip of paper with a check or money order for each copy you want at $3 plus 35c for postage and handling, to us at the address below. Calif. residents should include 6% sales tax. If you wish to also receive a matching frame, include an added $15. Allow about twenty days for delivery since this is handled through the mail. We will take care of your order as promptly as possible. Or stop in and see us at:

Blonde singer Peggy Lee is recovering at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica from what a hospital spokesman said was minor surgery. The 53-year-old singer sang the Oscarwinning song, "The Way We Were" at the Academy Awards last week and entered the hospital several hours later. The hospital would give no other details of the singer's ailment.

The house where Lola Montez, the celebrated Dancer," lived, may be torn down because it has deteriorated beyond repair. The house, built in 1850, is one of the oldest in Grass Valley. Miss Montez lived there from 1853 to 1855, before a second story was added. But the city council, heeding a public works agency report that the house has fallen into an unsafe condition, approved the filing of a complaint charging the structure is a public nuisance. It was the first step toward what could lead to demolition of the house.

The Mormon Church has named former treasury secretary David M. Kennedy as its special consultant for Diplomatic affairs. Kennedy, 68, of Chicago, was appointed to deal with the church's problems in foreign countries by Spencer W. Kimball, new president of the 3.3-million member faith. Kennedy served as treasury secretary in the first Nixon administration and was later an ambassador at large and ambassador to NATO. He went into the cabinet after 10 years as board chairman and chief executive officer of Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co., Chicago.

Christopher Lewis, son of actress Loretta Young, pleaded no contest in Los Angeles to child molestation charges in connection with an alleged "chicken flicks" ring, dealing in pornographic movies featuring small boys. Lewis, 29, and 13 other men were indicted last November on charges of soliciting boys from 6 to 17 to perform in movies. He could receive up to life in prison or a state mental hospital. Superior Court Judge M. Ross Bigelow ordered Lewis to undergo psychiatric examination and set sentencing for May 9.

2 Men Charged With Beating Actor Joe Flynn

FLORENCE, S.C. (UPI)-Two young men identified as Daniel Miller and Benny Ray Houston, of Rose Hill, N.C., have been charged with the beating and robbing of actor Joe Flynn in a motel room here earlier last week.

Florence County Sheriff William C. Barnes said Miller and Houston, both in their early 20s, were arrested and charged Friday with assault and battery with intent to kill and robbery.

Flynn, here for an American Cancer Society dinner, said he was robbed of $13 in cash, a $400 watch and assorted credit cards. He said he was struck in the face about five times, and suffered a badly cut mouth.

Flynn, best known for his role as Capt. Binghamton in the television series "Mc-Hale's Navy," said two men grabbed him as he was returning to his room about 11:20 p.m. Wednesday and held him a prisoner until about 1:20 a.m.

"They just grabbed me and hauled me off to their room," he said. "Then they beat me."

Sheriff Barnes said the arrests came as the result of a check on the registration card for the motel room. He said Flynn's watch as well as the credit cards were found in the possession of the suspects when they were arrested. The cash was not found, he said.

Relations Crisis Cited By College Head

FULLERTON — The greatest crisis today is the lack of interpersonal relationship among people, Grover B. Gordon, vice president of the Pacific Christian College here told the chamber of commerce-sponsored Sunrise Forum this past week at the Dal Rae Restaurant.

The lack of interpersonal relationship is revealed in the increasing crime rate, collapse of confidence, loneliness and depersonalization of life, Gordon said in his talk on "Crisis in Integrity and Education."

He said his college is seeking to train students to "relate to people and serve them" regardless of the occupation of the students. The college is attempting to provide a "living experience, a vitality, concern and love for people."

Gordon called for the training of students in moral and spiritual values.

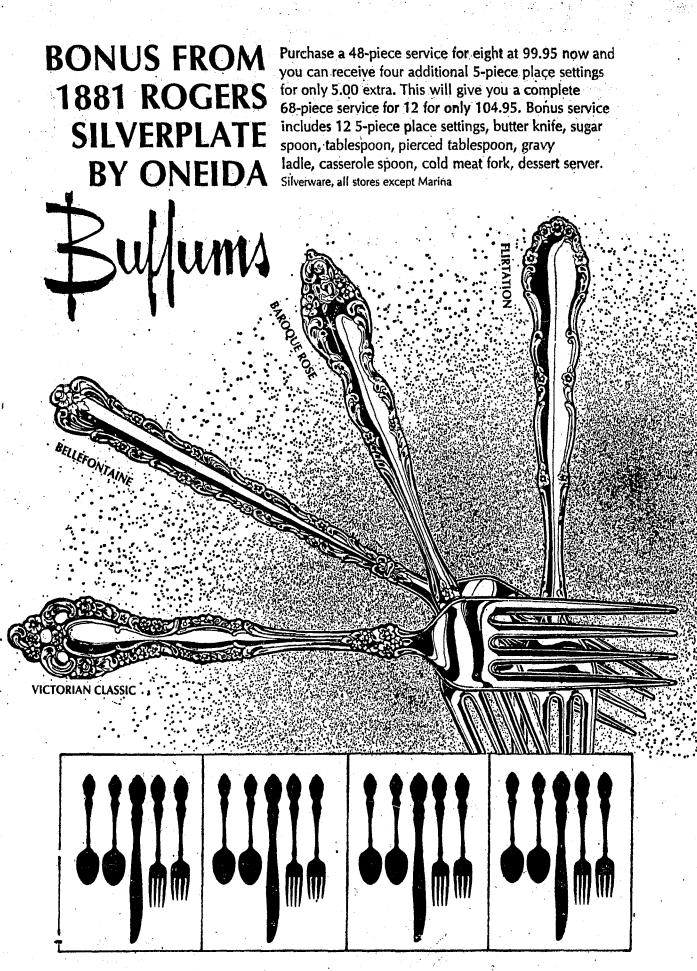

After operating in Long Beach for 43 years, the Pacific Christian College moved to Fullerton last year after purchasing a small shopping center south of Cal State Fullerton for $2.5 million. The center includes the Titan Theater and two dormitories in addition to commercial buildings. The college has 416 students.

Crossing Guard Pact Approved

FULLERTON—An agreement between Fullerton and Placentia to provide a school crossing guard at Bradford Avenue and Topaz Lane has been approved by the city

The cities will equally share $1,600 annual cost of providing the crossing guard for the Topaz Lane School in the Placentia Unified School District, according to the agreement.

The intersection is on the border between Fullerton and Placentia and the school is in Fullerton.

The Dodgers are getting up a "San Francisco Safari" for June 28-29-30, the first time the club goes to Candlestick against the Giants. For $44.50 they'll take up fans by air, give 'em a buffet party and tickets to three ball games. The Angels ought to work up something like this the first time they invade Oakland April 19-20-21. Mebbe too soon?

'SUN' ADVANCE SALES 7000

All the old-timers around Anaheim Stadium are amazed by the advance season ticket sales for the home games of the Southern California Suns. As of yesterday they were 7000, hardly enough to shake the Rams (40,000) off the hook but excellent for a club still more than two months from kickoff night. The Chicago Fire franchise is said to have peddled 11,000 season tix and Birmingham

The Sun club's public relations director, Brian Tracy, won't arrive until next month. He's tied down on another job along the east coast (Busch brewery). However, the World Football League will welcome aboard Gary Wright this week. Formerly with Long Beach State, he's now teaching at St. John Bosco High School He'll be a league publicist

JOHN ARRAMBIDE TO RETIRE

After 40 years as teacher, coach, athletic director and official, John Arrambide is going to retire from Mt. San Antonio College, an institution he has served throughout 26 of its 27 years. John is 61 and mandatory retirement is 65, but he says: "I'll make as much in retirement as I have made this year — so why not?"

Arrambide came off the football fields of Whittier, where he played on the same Whittier College team as President Richard Nixon. His first coaching job was at Fullerton JC in 1935, being the head fellow in football and baseball and matching wits with the likes of Bill Cook, John Ward, Doug Smythe. Burt Heiser and the other pioneer brethren. He was a member of the original Orange County Officials' Assn. for eight years . . .

Mt. Sac folks are going to give Arrambide a fond farewell with a retirement banquet on May 1 at Griswold's Pavilion, Claremont. Tickets are $10 and may be had (until April 24) at the college business office, Mt. San Antonio College, Walnut, Cal.

ANGEL KEYSTONE—One of the big reasons for a sparkling 2-0 start in the American League for the Angels is the play of a couple of newcomers. Second baseman Denny Doyle (shown forcing Ken Henderson in the first inning yesterday) and shortstop Dave Chalk

(7) have tightened up the infield with their sterling defensive play. Saturday was no exception as the Angels won 3-2 following an opening day 8-2 victory. Following today's series finale at Chicago, the Angels return home against Texas beginning Tuesday night.

Selma's 3-1 offering was hit right at Dave Chalk, who earlier went sprawling on his back to smoother a ball that was hit by Dick Allen and headed for centerfield.

Chalk's toss to Denny Doyle forced Ken Henderson and prevented any further damage after Buddy Bradford opened the Chicago first by hitting a 450-foot home run.

The Angel shortstop didn't have to leave his feet to field

Braves Bow To Kuhn, Hank Plays

By MILTON RICHMAN

CINCINNATI (UPI) - Atlanta Braves manager Eddie Mathews, bowing to the expressed dictate of baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, changed his mind again Saturday and announced he will start home run slugger Hank Aaron in today's game with the Cincinnati Reds here.

Mathews originally had openly defied Kuhn's order by announcing he would not play Aaron in the weekend games with the Reds at Riverfront stadium. He stuck to that decision by not using him in Saturday's 7-5 loss to the Reds.

Aaron, who tied Babe Ruth's lifetime record by hitting his 714th homer in Thursday's National League opener against the Reds now needs only one more home run to break the record and Mathews, and the Braves, both were anxious that he do it peal." when the club opens an 11game home stand beginning Monday night.

Mathews said he received the order to play Aaron after Saturday's game.

"We received a message from the commissioner after the game today that if Hank Aaron doesn't start tomorrow (Sunday) there will be very serious consequences," said Mathews.

"He also, for the first time, agreed to talk to me.

"I called the commissioner in the presence of Bill Bartholomay (Braves' president), manager) and Hank Aaron, commissioner directly ordered me to start Hank to-

"I asked what the serious consequences were, what the penalties would be and he refused to say except that they would be very serious." Mathews said.

"The commissioner has unlimited powers to impose very serious penalties on individuals and the ballclub itself," said the Braves manager. "For the first time I realized that these penalties are not only fines, but also suspensions and other threats to the

"Because of this order and the threatened penalties, I intend to start Hank Aaron tomorrow."

Under baseball rules, Bartholomay explained the Braves have no appeal from Kuhn's decision.

The showdown between Kuhn and Mathews, that is between a baseball commissioner and a manager, is unprecedented.

Bartholomay said he was completely behind his manager and explained that in the Braves' organization the manager has the sole responsibility for who plays and who does

"I have disagreed from the start that the commissioner should direct us to do what he has," Bartholomay added. "but we have no further ap-

Mathews emphasized at no point was any pressure put on him by either Bartholomay or Robinson to change his orginial decision, the one in which he said Aaron would not play in the weekend games, but possibly might be used by him as a pinchhitter.

"I made the decision to change my earlier decision," said Mathews. "It was my decision alone."

Mathews repeated that he asked Kuhn over the telephone what the "very serious consequences would be," but received no answer other than Eddie Robinson (general they would be "very serious."

Before reversing his deciand for the first time the sion, Mathews in his second full year as manager of the Braves had insisted he would not change his mind. Yet after he did, a question was put to him by newsmen whether he considered holding his ground and resigning his job over the issue?

"No," Mathews replied. "I like to eat too well. I didn't consider resigning over it."

Kuhn did not demand an immediate answer from Mathews over the telephone.

The Braves manager listened to the commissioner and merely said "thank you" after hearing what he had 'o

The Bucks, who thrashed the Lakers, 112-90. Thursday night in Los Angeles, can wrap up their semifinal Western Conference playoff with a victory in game No. 5 here tonight. The Bucks lead three games to one. .

The winner takes on the Detroit-Chicago victor for the Western Conference title.

Not many teams have come back from 1-3 deficits, and the Lakers aren't confident.

"It was like Custer's last stand and they were the Indians. They didn't leave a man standing," said Laker star Jerry West, who has played in the last two games despite an injury that had sidelined him for weeks.

The Bucks' Jon McGlocklin and Fritz Williams put the clamps on the Lakers' Gail Goodrich, limiting him to one field goal in 28 minutes. "If he has to struggle for that first one, it can throw his whole game off," said Bucks' coach Larry Costello.

"It had to be one of our best nights," said Costello.

He also praised center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar for outplaying Elmore Smith, who had led Los Angeles to its only victory Tuesday night. "Elmore got nine baskets but he got three of those on Cor- ing.

MILWAUKEE (UPI) -Pedro Garcias' two run homer in the seventh capped a five run rally and gave Milwaukee a 5-4 win over the Boston Red Sox Saturday aft-

The win ended a Red Sox streak of seven wins in a row over the Brewers dating back to last August.

Boston had a 4-1 lead and Bill Lee had allowed the Brewers just one hit before George Scott led off the decisive inning with a double. John Briggs walked and Bob Coluccio doubled both runners home to make it 4-3. Lee got Darrell Horter to line out to first but Garcias hit his first pitch 375-feet into the left field

Jim Slaton gave up all four Boston runs in the first on a three run homer by Cecil Cooper and a solo shot by Carl Yaztrzemski, then settled down until the ninth when he was replaced by Eduardo Rodriguez, after Hughes had singled with one on in the ninth. Rodriguez got the last two outs, including the final one on a strike out of pinch hitter Dick McAuliffe, to record his first save.

Lee took the loss, only his second in eight lifetime decisions against Milwaukee.

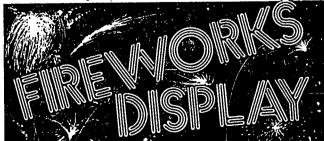

The Brewers got their first run in the first when Don Money was safe on third baseman Terry Hughes error, stole second and went to third scored on Abe Mays infield

AARON BENCHED - The continuing controversy over when and where Hank Aaron will play baseball heated up Saturday when manager Eddie Mathews "benched" his home run star at Cincinnati and said he'd save him for (UPI Telephoto) Atlanta fans to see a record-breaking 715 clout. However, commissioner Bowie Kuhn has countermanded that and Aaron reportedly will be in the lineup today as the Braves and Reds play in Cincinnati.

The gladiators shed their armor

By Murray Olderman

It's getting pretty tough for the old man to tell his kid he should drink his quart of milk and grow up to be like Babe Ruth (and everybody now knows what he was like). Not when Cesar Cedeno, the brightest young center-fielder in baseball, gets jailed on a murder rap, although freed eventually. And even gentle Bobby Bonds, voted the National League Player of the Year by his peers, becomes a cop-fighter for a night and winds up in the tank.

Those were just two of the between-season incidents which kept baseball in the

"What I did," he said, could happen to every in-dividual in the world. It's nothing to get embarrassed or ashamed about. I had some uptight moments. In my first incident, I was in one of those moods where I wanted to unwind and let myself go and I kind of let myself go too far. It's happened to a lot of people. I'm just one who got What Bobby was referring to was an initial "brush with the law" after the '72 season in which he was picked up for speeding and drunk driving pleaded "nolo contendere and paid his fine.

Then this last winter, he was in a car which his brother was driving when it was stopped on the Bayshore highway south of San Francisco. Since it wasn't his car. the brother didn't have adequate papers. There the facts get hazy. In these days, when two big

"A guy put his hand on my shoulder," recalled Bobby, and I pushed him back and he arrested me. I don't think it was as much as the newspapers made it out to be. I got stopped and I got put in jail. This is the first time in my life I ever got in trouble. I argued with a police officer and I got in jail. I never been put in jail before.

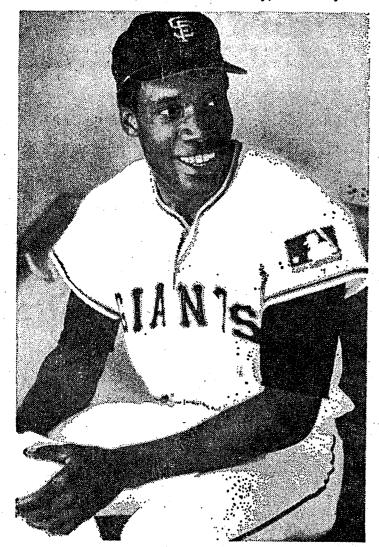

His tenure was from 2 a.m. until 5:30 a.m. and as Bobby reconstructed it, "I got me a out of the ball park to watch me perform, I should give them everything, 100 per cent. But once I go home, I owe myself some leisure time. I waited till I was having a good year for something to happen. If I was having a bad year, they might not even have known about it.'

Yet there is a sense of responsibility for his scrapes. 'It made me wake up and look at myself and realize I was making my teammates look bad by going out and doing these things, besides jeopardizing myself." And he has compassion for the predicament of Cedeno, the young Houston star.

"He had an incident I wouldn't wish on my worst enemy. I really felt sorry for him. I've talked to Cesar a lot and really, he's a helluva nice guy."

They stand together as two of the great natural talents in baseball. Bobby, at 28, is more seasoned. And he's finally standing on his own as a brilliant performer for the San Francisco Giants after years in the wings as the "heir apparent" to Willie Mays, with whom he played until Willie was traded in '72. Then Bobby, who first came up to the Giants in '68, emerged as a team leader. He hit 39 homers last year and stole 43 bases, a rare blend of speed and strength, and he's a brilliant defensive player in right field.
"When Willie was here," said Bobby, "if I'd go into a slump, I'd say, 'Well, Willie will help me.' All of a sudden Willie was gone and there was no one there to help me. I looked at myself and said, 'If I can continue to do the things he said, I can be a good ball player.' I had to sit back on myself. It's made me more aware and alert all the time." At least, for those times like now, when he spends all his energies working at being a baseball player.

HALOS—Ann Marie, the local topless dancer who strolled through White Sox Park Friday, doesn't really have a 62-inch bust afterall. Her corrected measuren ents are 67-25-36. Remarked Dave Sells: "She had more moves than Gale Sayers."

Three male and one female streakers who were taken in to custody were charged with disorderly conduct, but not indecent exposure. "To be indecency, if has to be calculated to arouse purient interest," explained police lieutnant Donald Keane. "I don't think they aroused any of that."

"If we win 160 more, I'll streak," promised Frank Robinson. Appropriately, Chicago pitcher Bill Moran has been nicknamed Buggss.
Cheer leading Chuck Tanner savs of his White Sox: "I'm excited, really excited. I'm so excited that I'm talking too fast, and I'm not even sure about what I've been saving. It's a great ball club. There's lust no end to its potential. It's an aggressive ball club, and competitive, and it's got great team spirit. I keep telling myself that we can't get hit with injuries the way we were last year, not two seasons in a row. But I've got to feel good about this ball club. I'm really optimistic."

Robinson's double in the opener was the 1.118th extra base hit of his career and moved him ahead of Jimmy Foxx and Ted Williams and Into eighth place on the all-time list. Rivers extended his two-season hitting streak to 16 qames, but Dovle's 14-game streak ended. The Angels, who won only two games here all last year, close out the series today with a game that will be televised by KTLA beginning at 11:15.

SEATTLE (UPI) - The University of Washington track and field team overwhelmed Oregon 93-70 in a dual trackmeet held in a downpour here Saturday to claim their first track victory over the Ducks since 1968 and only their third since 1954. The Ducks got one of their five wins because of the disqualification of Washington's 440-yard relay team. Terry Lavery won both hurdle races for the Huskies, then took part on the winning mile relay team.

Teammate Greg Gibson ran a 56.8 second last lap to pass Oregon's Mark Feig on the final turn and win the mile in 4:05.5.

Gibson became the first Husky to win the mile against the Ducks since 1949. "I don't like losing, "said

Oregon coach Bill Dellinger. "None of us like losing. But looking at it realistically, we're very thin at some spots. We've known for a long time that Washington had a good team. I'm not really surprised we lost."

Greg Sinnard Gets His Kicks

By CARL SAWYER

Never has a major league a legitimate home-grown hero baseball season opened with so much talk of football in the air. With the Angels and Dodgers already in the win column, football has people stirring in Orange County . . . and talking.

Sure as heck, next Tuesday night when the Angels turn on the lights at Anaheim Stadium for their home opener with the Chicago White Sox, some guy sitting behind third base is going to lean over and tell his buddy, "We've got to get seats higher up for football when the Sun schedule opens." While the free-spending play professionally," Sinnard World Football League has been making host of the football noise, the signing of an outside chance. All you got to do is ask

O.J.'s just as fast off the field as on

By Murray Olderman

The tipoff:

Jerry Kapstein, that new breed of sports lawyer, is still quietly checking into the possibility of a libel suit involving his client, Ken Holtzman — the A's 21-game winner was victimized by a hoax story in a San Francisco newspaper.

Q. It seems every time I look up, O.J. Simpson is in another place and doing another commercial or a movie. How does he manage to get around so much? - Paula Shea. Buffalo, N.Y.

O.J. sometimes finds himself coming and going, too. In one recent period, he took a 5:38 a.m. flight from Los Angeles to Tampa to do a commercial with Johnny Bench, zipped to Buffalo to be weighed in by Coach Lou Saban of the Bills, back to New York for his Wide World of Sports chores every weekend on ABC, out to Los Angeles Sunday night for another commercial, an award banquet in New York on Tuesday and then out to Oroville in northern California for his filming chores in a Lee Marvin-Richard Burton opus for three days after which he'd go back to New York for ABC. That's the way it goes when you're young and trying to cash in on gaining more than 2,000 yards.

Q. Who was the first high school student to high jump seven feet and who was the first to make 17 feet in the pole vault? Secondly, are you the same Murray Olderman who sketches? - Anthony Lederer, Sacramento, Calif.

Bill McClellon of Clinton High School in the Bronx, "Noo Yawk," was the first seven-foot prep jumper. In the pole vault, Casey Carrigan of Orting, Wash., was the first high schooler to achieve 17 feet which enabled him to make the 1968 U.S. Olympic squad, and as a senior the next year, he reached 17-4 3/4, still the national prep record. To the second question, aw, shucks, yes.

Q. I read an article on baseball players who quit to go into acting, and one plays the lead in "General Hospital." I say it's Joe Campanella, but my son says I'm mistaken. Please let me know. — Mrs. C. Herstine, Orleans, Calif.

The actor you referred to is John Berardino, who was a fine second baseman with the St. Louis Browns before, and just after, World War II and who was already acting before he gave up baseball. He still looks good, too. I saw him at the television studio in Los Angeles the other day and noted he should be in spring training. "I wish I was," said John. Q. What is there about pro football and the World Football League that makes it so enticing to George Sauer now, after he quit a few years ago because it was so de-humanizing? - Jack Berman, Rahway, N.J.

Actually, nothing. George talks about his return being influenced by the hiring of Vito (Babe) Parilli as the head coach of the New York entry in the WFL, but Babe, a fine -quarterback for many years and a low-key personality, has the typical jock mentality — which is no knock. The main factor is that George needs bread. His wife's the only one with steady employment (as a stewardess).

Q. Almost every young kid you see today playing tennis uses a two-hand backhand, in the manner of Chris Evert and Jimmy Connors, and yet the tennis professional at my club says that we should stay away from that kind of stroke. Why? - R.S., Columbia, Md.

The two-fisted approach is okay if you've been raised on it - it's powerful and, once mastered, gives the stroker great direction on his shots. But for the club player who spends a lot of time at doubles play, it can be disastrous because it's almost impossible to volley at the net with two hands and also limits your reach on wide shots.

Q. After watching Brian Oldfield, the shot put star, on the "Super Stars" on television, why isn't he playing pro football as a 275-pound running back with his speed? -Aaron Rey, Fresno, Calif.

For the same reason Deacon Jones, who could also run the 40 in 4.6 never carried the ball. It's easier to hit than be hit. And as a shotputter, Brian doesn't have to worry about physical contact at all.

Parting shot:

Despite all the rumors, Joe Namath will be back with the New York Jets this fall and might even sign a contract beforehand instead of letting his option expire.

Got a tough question about sports and the people who play them? All you got to do is ask Murray Olderman. Write him at (name and address of this newspaper). The most interesting questions will be answered in this column. Olderman regrets that he cannot write personal answers to all questions.

Allison Faces Big Challenge

DARLINGTON, S.C. (UPI) - Donnie Allison will take the starting flag first today but David Pearson and local hero Cale Yarborough may be the men to beat in the $101,650 Rebel 500 stock car race.

Allison won the pole position in a Chevrolet at 150.760 miles an hour, but the fastest car has little advantage on this treacherous 1 3-8 mile track in the South Carolina pine Chasing the leader will be 39 other cars, including Pearson, winner of the last three Rebel 500's, in a Mercury.

Yarborough, who is from nearby Timmonsville, S.C., has already won three races on the stock car circuit this year including the recent Atlanta 500. He won the Southern 500 here last year and will be among the favorites for the $15,875 winner's check in a Chevrolet.

Pearson was the second fastest qualifier for Sunday's run, followed by Bobby Allison, Donnie's brother, in a Chevrolet. Yarborough will start on the third row of the grid.

Others among the top starters are Buddy Baker and Richard Petty in Dodges; Dave Marcis in a Matador; George Follmer and Bobby Isaac in Fords and Benny Parsons in a Chevy.

Anthony Wins Firestone

AKRON, Ohio (UPI) - Earl Anthony of Tacoma, Wash., defeated Johnny Petraglia of Brooklyn, N.Y., 216-213 Saturday afternoon to win the $125,000 Firestone Tournament of Champions.

It was the battle of southpaws and Anthony, a crew-"If you're only one or two cut 36-year-old, was sitting on the bench as his victory was clinched and the top prize strike to win. He came in high on the headpin, failed to carry, and had to settle for the secondplace prize of $14,000.

The nationally telecast finals started with fifth-place qualifier Larry Laub of San Francisco facing fourth place Curt Schmidt of Fort Wayne, Ind., in the highest scoring game of the championship round. Schmidt fired a 259 and Laub, seeking his fourth victory of the year, was eliminated, despite a 244 effort.

Schmidt then went against Anthony, who after a slow start, finished with straight strikes for a 248-200 victory. His next game was a close one, as a pair of strikes in the ninth and tenth frames gave him a 215 score, just enough to top Roy Buckley of Columbus, Ohio, who rolled a 213.

Buffalo's Rally Edges Celtics

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI) - A while backcourters Randy Jim McMillan tip-in with one second left gave Buffalo a come-from-behind 104-102 victory over Boston Saturday in the Eastern Conference of the NBA semifinal playoffs to tie up the series at two games apiece.

The fifth game in the best ofseven series will be at Boston Tuesday evening.

Buffalo controlled the game off the boards in their comeback as McMillan had 18 grabs, Bob McAdoo, 16, and Gar Heard with 13 leading the way. Dave Cowens managed 14 retrieves for Boston.

McAdoo led the Braves with a game high 44 points, including seven-for-nine from the BOSTON (102) Havilcek 11 0-1 22 field for 15 points in the 0-0 8, Chanev 4 0-0 8, Williams 3 2-2 6 fourth quarter to spark the 48 6-7 102.

To most people the name Eric Hulst and Laguna Beach track are synonymous.

That myth was shattered Saturday at the 35th annual Laguna Beach Trophy Meet when Artist senior Doug Case high jumped 6-1014 to set a new Orange County prep record.

Case's leap, which came on his final try at 6-1014, wipes out the old mark of 6-9 set in 1972 by El Dorado's Tony Madau. Case's mark was the highlight of the meet which saw Laguna Beach successfully defend its sweepstakes championship.

A Fosbury Flopper, Case went into Saturday's competition with a season best of 6-61/2. After clearing 6-0 and 6-2 on his first tries, Case missed his opening attempt at 6-4 and then elected to pass until the bar moved up to 6-6.

Case sailed over 6-6, 6-7, and 6-7% on his first jumps, made 6-914 on his second try and then cleared winning height on his third and final attempt.

"Actually his first and second jumps at 6-101/4 were his best ones," said Laguna Beach coach Jim Toomey. "He was dropping his heels and hitting the bar. I don't think he was used to that height."

Case's leap into the record book equals the best jump in the CIF Southern Section this year. Steve Peterie of Warren High in Downey cleared the height earlier, while Alemany's Vic Churchill jumped 6-10 last week in the El Dorado Invitational.

As a result of his record, Case was named the meet's outstanding field event ath-

Why All The Shock Waves In NFL?

In situations like these, invariably there are some very funny things said. Don Shula, a man of straight-faced humor, was simply hilarious.

"I am disappointed, shocked, sick, whatever," he said at the news that his three stars were leaving for the other league. I had to wonder If he is as shocked, sick, disappointed, and whatever, as was Carroll Rosenbloom four years ago when Shula jumped the Colts.

The shock is on the other foot, but there really is no doesn't own the team."

And if Shula did own the team? Does Csonka really believe Shula would be any more inclined to throw around four or five million than is Joe Robbie?

It so happens that under the Miami Dolphin setup, Shula recommends the salary range for each player. But it's the filthy capitalist who gets the blame. Some fans blame the avarice of the players. The players blame their families whose insecurity forces them leaping from Baltimore to Miami, is the same thing as Larry Csonka leaping from Miami to Toronto. Man goes where the money is. It was ever thus. It simply seems to be a little more so now, because there is more money now.

Another of the funny things said is, "There comes a time when a man has to think of the security of his family."

Larry Csonka said that. Shula said that when he entered the contractural polevaulting event. I'm sure Willie Sutton said that just before ripping off the First Federal.

Why must everybody hide behind the wife and kids? Just once, when some guy succumbs to the taste of a million dollars, I'd like to hear him say, "I did it for me. I as though they were machilike money." I can hardly wait for Joe Namath to jump. He has no family to blame. I want to hear him say, "I did it because I like big cars and big going out of style. You can boats and big parties and big bet that the Canadian splurbroads."

Next to the funny things that are said are the awkward Miami owner doesn't. attempts to place the blame.

difference at all. Coach Shula, into such terrible deeds. And of course, there is John Bassett, the snake in the Canadian maple tree, who held out the apple. He shoulan't go around tempting our weakfleshed young red-blooded, green-currencied American boys like that. It's all his fault. When you think about it, it's none of these. The player can't be expected to go bust in a bidding war. The Canadians can't be blamed for splurging to get started in business, and if the fan in Miami feels deserted, and really wants to vent his hurt on someone or something, let him blame the tax loopholes in sports ventures.

When you start up a team, or buy a franchise, you can depreciate your ballplayers nery, over a five years span. That's why the sharpshooters, the capital gains boys, have invaded team sports throwing around money like it is ger has some tax gismo going for him right now that the Obviously, Joe Robbie is to blame for all this. When the owner in Toronto said he bid three million, Joe Robbie, the owner in Miami, didn't say four million. Obviously, it's Robbie's fault. He should have said four or five, or whatever it would have taken to keep Csonka, and Kiick and Warfiela in Maimi, just as Randolph Hearst should have got up the 20 million when the SLA told him to. Ask any Miami cabbie. He'll tell you it's Joe Robbie's fault.

"Let me emphasize," said Larry Csonka "that I'd be happy to play for a coach like Don Shula for the rest of my for it? You do. Who makes a football player or a basketball player able to demand, and get, a million dollars? You do. You will pay for it, in increased ticket prices or in taxes. Because when the club owner writes it off, the government doesn't decide what to do without that money. The government looks elsewhere -at you.

You amaze me. The resiliency of you, the fan, amazes me. The owner drops you, moving what you thought was your team, and you bounce back. The players drop you, jumping sometimes in the middle of a cheer, but you always bounce back. Silly, innocent, gullible you. The owners don't give a damn. The players don't give a dman. Only you give a damn. You continue to root for a city's name on a shirt. Did you ever stop to wonder why?

came out, indicating he's the highest paid football coach in Orange County and rivaled perhaps in the Southland by only head coaches at USC, UCLA and perhaps Long Beach State. Hartman was a finalist in the search for a new coach at Long Beach State when Jim Stangeland resigned after the 1973 campaign, indicating the 49er pay scale must be attractive. Other coaching salaries at county JC's pale in comparison to Saddleback's. The pay is $19,047 at Orange Coast, $18,033 at Golden West, $18,075 at Fullerton, $19,034 at Cypress and $16,021 at Santa Ana. Fullerton State pays head coach Pete Yoder $21,058 and he will endure more pressure than most when he and the Titans move into the "big time" in September of Fullowing State atoms. ber as Fullerton State steps up to the PCAA . . . This shouldn't be interpreted as a complaint about the salary structure for football coaches, merely a point of information. Perhaps there is a correlation between winning and salaries,

but administrators continually deny it. Hartman wins at Saddleback, but even the trustees must know the Gauchos have only operated in the Desert Conference and the Mission Conference, the Southland's weakest JC alignments. There isn't a coach at a county JC who wouldn't trade their tougher conference schedules for Saddleback's schedule and they also wouldn't mind trading paychecks. Sudden thought . . . Perhaps all of this is one reason why Hartman is adamantly against the formation of an all Orange County JC conference . . . which makes sense in this David, O.K. Holme. energy-conscious era.

ARCADIA-William Haggin Perry's Astray, a Kentuckybred son of Carlemont and Desert Vision, culminated his rise to prominence this season as he edged Chilean invader El Rey in the $125,000 San Juan Capistrano Invitational Saturday before 37,585 racing fans at Santa Anita.

Responding to the urging of jockey Jacinto Vasquez, Astray came on determinedly in the final furlong to tally by a neck in 2:45 2-5 for the approximate distance of a mile and three-quarters on the grass. His time equalled the course record set by Royal Living in the 1959 San Juan Capistrano.

Big Spruce, the 6-5 favorite under Laffit Pincay, was third, 21/4 lengths behind El Rey, with Court Ruling another length away in fourth place. La Zanzara, coupled in the betting with El Rey as the Charlie Whittingham-trained entry, finished fifth, with Acclimatization sixth and last.

Astray, which carried high weight of 126 pounds and was the 2-1 second choice, was winning his fourth grass $2 EXACTA (4-Bonnie Laddle N and 3-Count Pares) paid $57.80. stakes of the meeting, having previously accounted for the San Gabriel Handicap, a division of the San Luis Obispo Handicap and the $112,000 San Luis Rey Stakes at weightfor-age. Thus, he increased his earnings this season to $197,650 by nabbing first prize of $75,000.

Astray, a five-year-old bay horse, rewarded his supporters with $6.80, $3.80 and $2.20. El Rey, ridden by Alvaro Pineda, paid $3.80 and $2.20, while Big Spruce returned $2.10 to show.

"I waited as long as I could to ask him to make his run." said Vasquez. "He's a biglong-striding horse and if you override him you're liable to get him off his stride. And he tends to pull himself up when he gets to the lead.

"When you're going that far and carring that kind of weight, it's tough on your horse if you ask him to come again."

His win on Astray in the San Juan Capistrano climaxed a successful season for Vasquez, who was riding at Santa Anita on a regular basis for the first time this winter.

"Those are the_tough kind to lose," lamented Pineda. "I would have liked to have ridden El Rey at least one time before today. He got a little rank with me going across the dirt, but then he settled down and I knew I had dead aim on those leaders. It just depended on who was running at me from behind. The winner had about a half-length on me at one point and my horse came on again."

Pincay reported that "turning into the stretch Court Ruling went out and left an opening and then when I went for it he started back in. I yelled to the rider (Braulio Baeza), but he kept coming in and it made it kind of tight."

In addition to his win on Astray, Vasquez took the sixth race on Perry's Stook in a $14.80 surprise. Also doubling were Pineda, who swept a $153.80 daily double with Santana Sands at $20.20 and the second aboard Quaker Meeting at $16, and Don Pierce who tallied on Top Crowd at $11.20 in the seventh and Manaway at $9 in the

ARCADIA -The presence of My Great Aunt, Sphere and Belle Marie in today's $45.100 Santa Ana Handicap at Santa Anita makes the mile-andone-eighth turf contest look like an intrasquad match, as all three distaffers hail from the Charlie Whittingham sta-

Ten other fillies and mares are entered to try for the $27,100 top prize in the race that bars winners of a $12,500 first-place purse during the current season.

My Great Aunt, a Kentucky-bred daughter of Bold Ruler, will carry top weight of 120 pounds in her first start since finishing fourth in the grassy Santa Barbara Handicap two weeks ago. Another pair of Whittingham-trained lasses - Tallahto and La Zanzara — finished first and second in that 10-furlong event.

'Pet' Captures

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (UPI) - J. R.'s Pet, a nominee for the Triple Crown classics. outlasted Silver Florin by a head Saturday to capture the $144,850 Arkansas Derby before an Oaklawn Park record crowd of 41,038.

Silver Florin and third place Nick Folly, both were members of the parimutuel "field" in the wagering. J.R.'s Pet, the co-favorite coupled with stablemate Perfect Aim which finished out of the money, paid $7.20, $4.20 and $3.60 across the board. A total of 17 three-year-olds went to the post in the mileand-an-eighth classic, the 38th running of the Derby which closes the Oaklawn season. Behind the first three Big Latch was five lengths further back in fourth place.

J. R's Pet, ridden by Darrel McHargue, owned by W. Cal Parkee, a Magnolia, Ark., businessman, and trained by former jockey Harold "Baldy" Tinker, was clocked in 1-50 3-5.

The place and show horses, Silver Florin and Nick's Folly, were coupled in the wagering with County Fearless. To the Rescue and My Eye and paid $8.60 to place and $7.60 to show.

Tinker saddled his second Arkansas Derby winner. His first was Areopolis in 1957. J. R.'s Pet earned $86,910 and was McHargue's 73rd winner of the 50-day Oaklawn season, a new record for riders at the track. The former record of 68 winners was set by Larry Snyder in 1969.

A winner of two stakes while competing in France last year, My Great Aunt has yet to win a race in this country after four starts. Don Pierce will ride the four-year-old filly from post position eight.

The team of Sphere and Steve Valdez come right back after finishing first at the end of nine furlongs on the turf last week. The daughter of Round Table was disqualified for interference, however, and Valdez was handed a five-day suspension. Sphere gets in at 114.

Completing the entry is Kinship Stables' Belle Marie, with Bill Shoemaker and 118 aboard.

second high weight of 118 with Belle Marie.

Flying Fur (114 and Braulio Baeza), Grasping (115 and Alex Fernandez), and Reputaton (115 and Bill Mahorney) have all registered victories at the Santa Ana route.

Cutty enters the Santa Ana fresh from a main track score at one mile, and apprentice Octavio Aviles returns in the saddle for trainer Buster Millerick.

Breaking from the inside post in the large field will be Mini Midi Maxi (112) and rounding out the lineup are Ground Song (113) and Merry Madeleine (11), Jungle Prin-

Whittingham, Hollywood Park's all-time stakes trainer, may have two rounds of amunition from his powerful arsenal ready for Wednesday's opening-day $30,000 Premiere Handicap at the Inglewood

Whittingham, who won seven stakes at Hollywood last year including four $100,000 victories, may saddle his newest star, Governor Max in the Premiere along with Marge Everett's Matun-winner of the San Simeon Handicap last week at Santa Anita.

Governor Max was recently purchased by Oregon lumber mogul Aaron Jones, the man who also owns Linda's Chief, La Zanara and the unbeaten Miss Musket. Governor Max has been racing in the East and last summer won a division of the Arlington-Washington Futurity.

★ ★ ★ ★ BUSY SCHEDULE—Joe O'Brien, harness racing Hallof-Famer, has to have set some kind of travel record the past 10 days.

O'Brien, 13-time Western Harness driving champion and the 1973 Southern Cal Racing Association percentage leader, has been spending more time in airplanes than he has in the bike.

Last week, O'Brien drove in New York, Florida, Chicago and at Los Alamitos as well as making several trips home Shafter, Calif. to train young horses at his ranch.

PAINT APLENTY won't recognize Hollywood Park if you're planing to attend Wednesday's opening of the 76-day thoroughbred racing season.

The exterior has been painted a brilliant red and orange while the inside has also, been repainted in many spots.

Track superintendent Keith

CHARLIE READY-Charlie Humphrey estimates that horse stable to Maywood some 7,000 gallons of paint Park and Sportsman's Park were used in the re-painting in the Chicago area, where he project and he says more than 70 painters were involved in the chore. "Of course, the basic colors are orange and a brilliant red," Humphrey points out, "but all told, there's something like 160 different colors, tints, and shades that went into the overall project."

EASTERN BOUND?-Miss Musket, the unbeaten threeyear-old filly who carried Bill Shoemaker to his 100th career hundred grand victory last weekend at Oaklawn Park in the $100,000 Fantasy Stakes, may be doing most of the summer racing in the East.

Trainer Charlie Whittingham has hinted that he may point Aaron Jones' brilliant miss for the sophomore filly triple crown, a series consisting of the Acorn Stakes. Coaching Club Oaks and Mother Goose.

You may recall that Windy's Daughter, a West Coast development by Tommy Doyle, won jewels legs of the crown last season.

Shoemaker, incidentally, said he was "relieved" that he'd finally reached his stakes goal. "I'm kinda glad it's over," said Shoe. "Now I can take things on a day-today basis."

LEADER TO LEAVE?-Don't be surprised to see Los Alamitos' leading harness driver, Gene Vallandingham, head for Chicago next week.

Vallandingham, who set a record at the recent Bay Meadows meeting with 38 wins and more than $100,000 in purse money, began the week with a slim lead over Jim Dennis and Bobby Williams in the local driving der-

NEW DERBY LINE—After last weekend's rather topsyturvy three-year-old stakes results, Reno oddsmakers have revised their line on the 1974 Kentucky Derby.

Protaganist is the 5-1 favorite while Judger, third as the heavy choice last week in the Flamingo Stakes, is 6-1 followed by Agitate and Cannonade, both at 12-1 are Bushongo, Aloha Mood and Triple Crown.

POPULAR VICTORY-Milo Valenzuela's surprise win aboard Destroyer in Sunday's Santa Anita Derby was a most popular victory in the Santa Anita jockeys room.

Milo received the traditional 'bucket of water' when he returned to the room following Destroyer's $89 shocker and one of the first to offer his congratulations was Bill Shoemaker.

The 39-year-old Valenzuela. who has fallen upon hard times the past few seasons, collected $8,250 for the Derby victory—his first big payday since 'winning' the controversial 1969 Kentucky Derby with Forward Pass. And at that. he didn't collect his derby check until the courts cleared up the matter last fall.

The stakes victory for Milo was his first at Santa Anita since 1971 when he won the San Marino Handicap with Pleasant Harbor and marked grand triumph ever at the Arcadia track. He captured the $100,000 san Juan Capistrano aboard Pardao in 1963. Perhaps best remembered for his rides aboard racing's all-time money-winner, Kelso. Valenzuela has won nearly 2,500 races and more than $20 million in purses over his 25year career.

SHORT STRIDES_Only three claims of foul by a rider have been allowed at Santa Anita the past three years, but two of them have come this season within two weeks of one another, Fernando Toro (Sighing Seas) claimed foul on Braulio Baeza (and Irish Kellin, March 16, and was awarded the first race victory for interference. Shula and managing partner Joe Robbie of the Miami Dolphins are trying to halt defections like those of the three Dolphin stars who quit to go to the fledgling World Football League (WFL), all-pro safety Jake Scott said Satur-

Scott, also negotiating with the WFL, said he "really believes coach Shula and Joe Robbie will make the effort to keep everybody" on the world champion Dolphins.

"I know they made an effort to keep me," said Scott, who had been offered $500.000 to quit the Dolphins and play out a three-year contract with the WFL team in Hawaii.

Scott met with Shula and Robbie, after three days give and take negotiations in Birmingham, Greensboro, N.C., and Atlanta. Shula had been in Greensboro for a speaking engagement.

After the meeting with Shula and Robbie, Scott said "I consider myself signed, but I have reserved the right to have my lawyer here to look. at the contract." Scott said his lawyer would come to Miami from Colorado at the beginning of the week.

He said there were a few parts of the contract that didn't seem right to him, and he wanted his lawyer to look the contract over before he signs on the dotted line.

Scott and Jim Mandich, another Dolphin player who had been in negotiations with the Birmingham club, said Friday they expected to sign contracts with Robbie in Miami Saturday.

Mandich, like Scott, is now expected to sign his contract Monday.

Neither of the players disclosed the dollar figures of HONOLULU (UPI) - All pro tight end Ted Kwalick of the San Francisco 49ers has signed a multi-year contract with the Hawaiians of the World Football League.

Kwalick, the No. 1 draft choice of the 49ers in 1969. still has one year left to play out his option in the National Football League.

Hawaiians Coach Mike Giddings said: "We're delighted to have him for several reasons. He was our top choice. He is a premier tight end and besides he's a super guy."

Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Dolphins Trying To Halt Defections

MIAMI (UPI) - Coach Don their new Dolphin contracts. Mandich had been offered something in the neighborhood of $300,000 by the Birmingham team, and said "Mr. Robbie made me a very generous offer. Birminghams' offer was not that much more by the time the Dolphins upgraded their figures."

Scott, who turned down the $500,000 offer from Hawaii. said "the Dolphins and I are still about $50,000 apart" in the salary discussions over what he had wanted and what the Dolphins were prepared '2

He nonetheless accepted the Dolphin offer.

Three of the Dolphins' star players, Larry Csonka, Paul Warfield and Jim Kiick, caused a stir in sporting circles last week by announcing they had accepted an offer -reportedly for $3.5 million -to leave Miami and join in Toronto Northmen of the of the WFL.

DETROIT (UPI) - The Detroit Wheels of the World Football League Saturday announced the signing of two wide receivers and a defensive lineman, all with limited experience in the National Football League.

Wheels general manager Sonny Grandelius said contracts have been signed for the upcoming season by wide receivers Jon Henderson and Hubie Bryant and defensive lineman Carl Tabi. All three were among the fledgling WFL club's top nine draft choices. Henderson, 29, drafted fourth, played for the Pittsburgh Steeelers in 1968 and 1969, was traded to Washington and wound up with Calgary in the Canadian Football League in 1971—the year they won the championship. The six-foot, 205-pound receiver signed with the Denver Broncos in 1972 but was ruled ineligible and sat out both the 1972 and 1973 season. Bryant, 27, won the Big Ten track championships in the 60-yard and 220-yard dash for Minnesota. The 5-foot-10, 170 pounder signed with the Cleveland Browns as a free agent in 1968, but was released and played two years in the Continental Football League before returning to the NFL in 1970 with the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Tabi, 23, 6-foot-4 and 250 pounds, played with Washington in 1972 and the Philadelphia Eagles last season.

Most candidates have campaigned by taking frequent verbal swings at noise and pollution which they say are caused by the Orange County Airport, the Irvine Co's. Promontory Point apartment development, and traffic problems-all of which have few local defenders.

The closest approximation to fireworks has occurred in the District 1 race, which pits two-term incumbent Howard Rogers, a calculator-computer firm executive and present vice mayor, against Marguerite "Peg" Forgit, wife of former councilman Al Forgit.

As a result of her suit, Superior Court Judge Mark Soden last month struck down a portion of a city campaign finance law which restricts a candidate's contribution to his own campaign to $500.

Rogers favors restrictions on developers and residential density, but has warned against the city adopting a "no growth" point of view.

-Increase the minimum amount for which a public works contract would have to be let by city council under formal bid procedures from $5,000 to $12,000. Contracts for less than the charter-specified minimum may be let by city staff on an informal basis.

-Authorize council to enter into contracts or lease property for 55 years, instead of the now-permitted 25 years, subject to certain restrictions.

-Enact what City Clerk Laura Lagios characterizes as a series of "housekeeping" measures, amending, deleting and updating a number of clauses in the charter to bring it into conformity with state law and eliminate auplications and conflicts.

The proposed amendments were approved by council for submission to the voters earller this year.

HUNTINGTON BEACH—At least one new face is sure to appear on the city council after voters here elect four councilmen, a city clerk and a city attorney Tuesday.

Three incumbents are among 14 candidates seeking council seats, but two-term Councilman Jack Green is and is not seeking re-election.

Seeking re-election are Ted Bartlett, Alvin Coen and Norma Gibbs. Their opposition includes a former mayor, a former chairman of the planning commission and an official of the non-profit corporation that arranged financing civic center.

Votes will be day night on a $428,000 computer system, which promises to provide final totals within three hours after the polls close. It will mark the first time a city in Orange County has conducted a locally computerized election. The city's 63,600 eligible voters also have a choice of four city clerk hopefuls, including incumbent Alicia Wentworth. Don Bonfa, incumbent city attorney, is running unopposed.

Of the incumbent council eandidates, Bartlett has contest with his print entitled served the longest. He is seeking his fifth term, having been on and off the council since 1944 and serving twice as mayor.

Coen's two terms have included two stints as mayor, while Mrs. Gibbs is seeking her second term. She is a former mayor of Seal Beach.

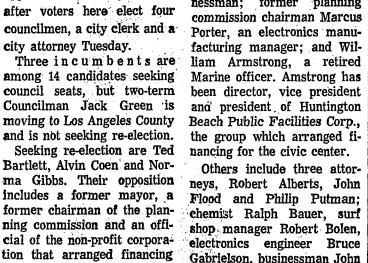

Those challenging the incumbents include former mayor George McCracken, a businessman; former planning clerk's position include James Dukette, an administrative services assistant; Bernard Mahoney, a business systems consultant; and Katherine (Kitty) Wallin, an administra-

Prompting the four-week head count here was the city's insistence that not enough revenue sharing funds were being channeled into the city, because the state's tally was too low.

Revenue sharing funds were being allocated to the city on the basis of a 49,500 population. But planners here had speculated that the number of Jzoned for residential subdiviresidents might be approaching 52,000.

When the final tabulations were made from the special census, however, it was determined that there are 50,118 persons living here.

"The household sizes dropped," surmisea planning director Clint Sherrod. "Homes here are larger in size, but there just aren't as many children as we thought."

Since the last census was taken in 1970, the number of occupants per household has dropped from 4.06 to 3.57, said Sherrod, adding that he was

Vandals Can't Kill Rustic Labor Of Love In Dana Point

DANA POINT-Heartbreak outdoor nature classroom for feet of utility poles for build- loose, path destroyed and sy-Ridge is only a half-mile from all of Orange County's stu-

It is an 18-acre canyon that was filled with a labor of love for the benefit of man and besst-until hate armed with a crowbar tore it asunder.

Dana Hills High School students had long roamed through the canyon, stretching for a half-mile from the school toward the ocean, happy that raccoons, opossums, foxes, rabbits and squirrels had found it a haven from encroaching housing tracts.

The students and the faculty had harbored a dream that the area might be saved as a dents and residents.

Thunderbird Homes made the dream come true when the firm donated the land and the Capistrano Unified School District approved it as a park-sanctuary last year.

An army of students, local Youth Corps volunteers and other nature lovers poured into the canyon and, at the end of 1,800 man hours, trails were cut, brush cleared. paths cut through the chaparral, scrub oak and buckwheat, and 11 footbridges constructed over the rough terrain.

The San Diego Gas & Elecwildlife preserve and as an tric Co. donated 3,000 linear ing bridges and seats: Phil Grignon, vice principal of the school, donated his $1,000 Disneyland Award given for hiswork on the project; a state conservation schooling program donated $4,600, the school district gave $1,000 and Grignon chipped in another $1,500 he earned from lectures and speeches. When the work was completed, it was a prize-winning project of community pride. And then the destroyers bars and ripped it apart. Four of the 11 bridges were torn down, tables lifted off their foundations, seats torn came in the night with crow-and cruelly dismembered. Crowbar marks on the bridge proved that vandals had entered the canyon with the deliberate malicious intent to systematically wreak havoc.

The original velunteer workers and the neighborhood youth corps are no longer available to repair the damage and the donations for the project are long spent. But a new army of helpers is forming to right the wreckage of the sanctuary where adults and students could come into contact with Dana Point wildcamore shade trees uprooted Ronald Caspers has announced that he is donating $100 toward the rebuilding of the ecology area "to show the kids who put so much effort into the project that some people really care what they did

Landmark Building Saved In Fullerton

FULLERTON—A landmark building—the city's first children's library-has been saved from demolition by the city council.

Removal of the Girl Scout cabin in Hillcrest Park, which had been condemned by the fire department as unsafe. came up for consideration by the council at its last meeting.

The Girl Scout Council of Orange County had informed the city that it did not wish to renew its lease agreement with the city for the cabin because extensive repairs and remodeling are necessary to bring the building up to safe standards, City Administrator Will F. Cornett told the coun-the park and recreation department, said his department does not recommend expending the necessary funds and that his recommendation is to have the building removed.

The building had been constructed in the 1920's and dedicated in 1927 as the city's first children's library. Mrs. Marsha Brown, a Girl Scout leader, told the council in her plea to save the structure from demolition. "Save the former children's library for future generations," Mrs. Brown asked.

The city council agreed with her and unanimously voted to save the building and instructed the park and recrea-

James M. Cowie, Director of tion commission to find a other essential support requireplace for it.

The building had been moved from its original site to Hillcrest Park and used for a Girl Scout meeting place. Thousands of girls have used the building.

In response to the city's request that the Girl Scout Council remove the building as provided in the lease agreement, the group requested that the council authorize its removal at city taxpayers' expense because the move would divert the scout councisl's limited resources from ments, Cornett said. The estimated cost for demolition was

Court Decision Due On After-Hours Club

SANTA ANA-A decision on den Grove City Atty. Eric a request for a permanent Lauterer repeated his conteninjunction to prevent Garden Grove from enforcing ordinances prohibiting dancing after hours is expected to be issued by Superior Court Judge Robert Kneeland this week.

He took the case under submission Friday following a brief hearing. The lawsuit was filed by

The Outer Limits coffee house, 11918 Garden Grove Blvd., after former owners Bevan Rogers Harvey and Charles Thomas Harvey were arrested for allowing dancing between 2 a.m. and 6 a.m. At Friday's hearing, Gar-

Gas Station Sign Ordinance Okayed At HB

HUNTINGTON BEACH -Spurred by the energy crisis, the city council has approved on first reading an "emergency ordinance" requiring gas stations to post their prices and hours of operation.

Councilman Ted Bartlett, who operates a gas station in the city, said the ordinance is necessary because "the gas shortage isn't over and there is a wide difference in the prices that stations are chargtion that the city may use its police and licensing powers to regulate after-hours dancing.

He emphasized that the city is not attempting to forbid dancing but only to regulate it, and he said, "There is nothing to indicate that we have abused our discretion or violated constitutional rights."

But Ludwig Gerber, who represents The Outer Limits (now known as The Climax Club), said that dancing is an expression of speech and is protected by the First Amendment.

"It has never been proven that between 2 and 6 a.m. dancing is any more outrageous than it is during any other hours," he said. "Many people who work the swing shift would like to swing."

The club lost its bid for a preliminary injunction and the U.S. District Court of Appeals refused to hear an appeal.

The charges against the Harvey brothers, and two others who subsequently were arrested for the same reason, are pending in municipal court.

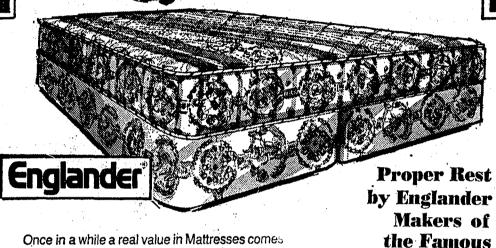

The city ordinance in question prohibits dancing, live music and pool playing in establishments open to the public between 2 and 6 a.m.

Past power shifts, shakeups and political skirmishes have divided the city's political activists into two distinct. diametrically opposed camps with little if any middle ground. Though several of the council candidates claim independence from either of the factions, the three incumbents are being promoted by one side with the four challengers having the favor of the other. The future of those two factions-and the political direction of the city-rests on which one will be able to win support at the polls.

The main factor that sets this election off from other ones, however, is that within a period of months all five councilmen possibly will have to face re-election.

Up for grabs Tuesday are the seats of the three members of the council's majority bloc. Mayor William Brown and councilmen Charles Heiser and Joe Hyde. And though the final stone has vet to be turned for a recall election, if -as expected-such an election is held later this year, it will be the two minority council members. Ken Miller and Charles Long, who will be before the voters.

Challenging the incumbents are Phillip Cox. an attorney: Tom Homrighausen, an insur-

And both Miller and Long have indicated the strong possibility that they would resign from the council if the three incumbents win.

Similarly, if all three of the incumbents were to lose, their opponents would be insured of four years of power. And, since the removal of Miller and Long would still fail to change the balance of power, the enthusiasm of the recall movement against them likely would be somewhat diluted.

On the other hand, if one or two of the incumbents were to BREA - A $100 U.S. savings bond will be awarded the winner of a contest to rename Lake Placentia, according to a city official.

Placentia, Brea and Fullerton have entered into a joint power agreement with the county to convert the 10-acre lake and 30 acres surrounding it into a regional park.

The joint powers committee said the new name should combine "concepts" of America's 1976 Bicentennial year with the area's Mexican heritage, said Mike Davis, assistant to the city manager.

Local entries should be sent to the city hall, 401 S. Brea Blvd., no later than April 26. The winning name will be announced—and probably adopted-at the authority group's May 1 meeting.

DANA DAYS AHOY—Though the annual celebration of Dana Days seems far off, Aug. 2 to 4, plans are already under way in the Dana Harbor for a boat show that will be part of the event. Herb Johns has been named coordinator by the chamber of commerce and Valerie Powers, boat show chairman. With them in photo are boat dealers Bill Farella, Dick Hayward, and a representative of the Dana Point Marine Studies Institute, Mark Howe. The boat show is expected to attract boat and accessories dealers from the entire Southern California coast.

YOU CAN BECOME SLIM AND TRIM AGAIN

Vitamin 'E' Discovery Offers Fast Weight Loss

HOLLYWOOD (Special)-A new vitamin E diet that quickly works wonders on overweight people, is reportedly gaining great popularity across the country with glowing reports of easy weight loss "while still eating almost as much as you want."

Those who follow the simple Vitamin E diet report an average loss of up to a pound a day and even more without strenuous exercise or star-vation. Testimonial files are bulging with happy testimonials from formerly overweight people who are now trim and slim again. Best of all, you can still eat almost as much as you want of the "forbidden foods" like steak, chicken, fish, sauces, gravies, bacon & eggs and still lose weight.

Chewable (candy-like) Vita-E tablets, as used in the diet plan, contain a new combination of ingredients that curbs and controls the appetite, while also giving the wonderous benefits of Vitamin E which is so essential to good health.

The use of the new Vitamin E Diet tablets and foods prescribed in the plan will, through natural action, act to help your body use up excess fat. A person with an improper diet, deficient in vitamins and exercise, can with the help of this diet plan "hasten" the utilization of body fat and carbohydrates causing loss of weight.

E-DIET AVAILABLE To get a copy of this highly successful diet and E Tablets, send $5.00 for 10 day supply (or $7.00 for 20 day supply on $10.00 for 20 day supply or $10.00 for 30 day supply to: Vita-E Diet Dept. 3 , 11526 Burbank Blvd., North Hollywood, Cal. 91601. Coastal Board Delays Appeal On LB Project

BURLINGAME—An appeal before the California coastal zone control commission from a Laguna Beach man who is attempting to halt the demolition of three vacant downtown Laguna Beach buildings has been postponed two weeks. The final vote on the plans submitted by Laguna Federal Savings and Loan has been rescheduled for April 17 in Long Beach. Laguna Federal Savings and Loan plans to demolish three non-conforming woodframe buildings to make room for a parking facility.

The South Coast regional control commission approved the project earlier this year and Arnold Hano, a former member of the Laguna Beach Board of Adjustments, appealed that decision.

"Miracle Cure?"

5,000 YEAR OLD

PEKING (Special)— Health researchers in China have uncovered an amazing rare old Chinese herb remedy that possesses spectacular healing qualities and regiortedly has been used for 5,000 years to cure or give relief to a host of the most common illnesses suffered by mankind. Dramatic claims are being made that this "miracle herb" called ginseng, may actually hold the key to a longer healthier life. Indeed, there is one historical case of a user living to be 256 years old.

Helps Many Illnesses Like acupuncture, the many healing properties of this remarkable herb were once considered "folklore and superstition", but modern researchers around the world are suggesting that it may actually regulate many of the body's processes to increase SEX-UAL potency, help heal ULCERS, relieve ARTHRITIS, check gray-ing or loss of HAIR, improve DIGESTION, slow down ARTER-JOSCLEROSIS, relieve ASTHMA overcome FATIGUE, improve DI-ABETIC conditions, relieve inflammation of the URINARY TRACT, help chronic INSOMNIA relieve BACKACHES and PAINS and generally improve your health by increasing your body's potential to heal itself.

Safe, No Side Effects Ginseng is not a drug, but an herb or vegetable that is extremely rich in vitamins and minerals. What's more, this amazing natural remedy is completely safe and non-toxic with no side effects. Unfortunately, high-grade ginseng is in short supply, and brokers and processors around the world are bracing themselves for a "run" on the market as the herb's purported "near miraculous" healing properties become more widely known to the general about a bigger threat: the shortage of mature olive trees in Orange County.

I'm not worried about the martini drinker and his garnish, because those olives are imported from Spain.

I'm concerned for future generations who may never know the delights of raising and curing olives. And the fun you can have with visitors from the East who think that tree-ripe olives are edible.

My romance with the olive goes back as far as I can remember. My grandmother's house in Tustin, which stood rer years where the post office is today, had a beautiful olive tree in the back yard. It provided shade on warm days and a bountiful crop of fruit every year.

The big thrill at Thanksgiving was when my Aunt Ruth Bowman would bring out her home-cured olives-some of stead of sitting around consuming martinis before dinner, we would eat her olives.

When our family moved to a new home in North Tustin 20 years ago, my father planted an olive tree in the back yard. He placed the little tree in a raised circular red brick planter. With little care, other than occasional watering, it grew to be a big tree.

In time, it bore so much fruit that my parents had to invite their friends in for an annual olive harvesting festival. Everyone would take turns climbing the ladder and plucking the fine, fat fruit. Their real reward came at Christmas time, when my mother whould hand out quart jars of the home cured crop to friends. Delicious, everyone agreed.

Those days have passed, unfortunately, and so has the supply of mature olive trees. You see olive trees these days as decorations in shopping centers, housing developments and planted in center

dividers in Laguna Hills, Mission Viejo and Laguna Niguel. few groves left in the county but they're in out-of-the-way places on the Starr Ranch. A few trees are left in the town of Olive, and there are some

in Modjeska Canyon. A few trees surround the little St. George's mission church in El Toro, the only remnants of a once flourishing industry

According to Jim Sleeper's First Orange County Almanac, "The first trees were planted at the Mission, where olive oil was pressed in considerable quantity, much of it used in soap-making. In 1890, Capistrano even had an olive oil factory. First commercial plantings began in the late 1880's and reached 32,875 bearing and 11,060 non-bearing trees by 1904. The following year, James Irvine helped organize the American Olive Co., which developed a successful formula for canning ripe olives." Sleeper says that olive sizes varied anywhere from 30 to 200 olives to the pound.

> There are no commercial olive groves left in Orange County today, reports county farm adviser Ken Miller.

"It's not economical because of the price of land," says Miller. "Most olive production in the state has moved into the Sacramento Valley."

Keeline Wilcox Nursery in Irvine raises and sells some olive trees, but salesman Don Romero says the tree is not as popular as it was 10 years ago. "The price is going up and the big trees are getting scarce," he says.

The suggested retail price on their largest tree, which comes in a 48-inch box, is $630. Romero said that "very few" of the big ones are sold

He estimated that they sell approximately 10 trees a month in the 16 to 24-inch box size, at a cost ranging from $70 to $160.

It takes up to five years to grow a tree for a 24-inch box.

"Olives are still popular although many people are afraid of the fruit," Lang says. "When they mature and fall, people are afraid of the stain that results when they're stepped on."

"It is the appeal as an ornamental tree, because it has a great deal of character with the twisted trunk, that makes the olive tree good to use in landscaping," Long says. "They are unassuming, they are extremely easy to move, and you can do almost anything with an olive tree. They make extremely good wood for carving. It's very suitable for a lot of purposes." I agree with the action taken by Gov. Hiram Johnson back in 1914 when he proclaimed March 31 of the following year as Ripe Olive

The distance from Tustin to the Saddleback campus has been a major concern of a group of Tustin residents who want to de-annex from Saddleback and join Rancho Santiago (Santa Ana) College District, only three miles

"It's a good idea," said board president Hans Vogel of North Tustin, who has resigned effective June 4. "We have five unified school districts that feed Saddleback College. Their buses are used in the early morning and afternoon, but not in between. Maybe we could make some arrangements with them to use their buses in the dead time in between."

Mrs. Brandt said that the Orange County Transit District is soon planning bus service to the college from Tustin, but she was critical of the route.

She said a student from Tustin would leave from Larwin Square in Tustin, have to ride to Santa Ana, transfer to another bus going to Leisure World, then transfer to a third bus running through Mission Viejo which would reach the campus.

State Welfare Board Report Says Aliens Abusing Assistance Programs

Illegal aliens are abusing the state's public assistance programs, concludes a 1973 report issued by the State Social Welfare Board.

The 54-page report says, "Border patrol officers have become aware of entire families who have entered the country illegally and had been admitted to the public assistance rolls or cases in which the apprehended alien had been living with a welfare family."

Abuses are extensive in The Family Group Program, one of the largest categories of aid in the state, the Unemployed Parent Program, and medical aid programs, the report states.

Basic information indicates that "illegal and temporary aliens, as well as recent immigrants, represent a potential for sizeable impact on state and local tax-supported. programs," the report says.

In an official recommendation, the board urged that specific programs be adopted that require each applicant for public assistance to be screened through records of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service to determine alien status and eligibility of assistance.

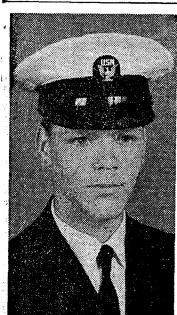

The report states that it is a "popular misconception that the illegal alien has a criminal nature." The alien is "motivated by a desire to obtain employment from which he can earn sufficient money for his own support or the support of a family.

"Generally, the longer the illegal alien stays in this country, the farther he gets from the border, the more money he is able to save, and the more proficient he becomes with the English language, the less likely he is to be apprehended.

"In spite of regular and periodic roadblocks, the staffing of border check stations, roving patrols, aircraft surveillance, and other more sophisticated techniques, the task of maintaining a tight control. . . over the miles of border is practically impossible," the report concludes.

Abuses of the public assistance programs represents a critical economic situation for the state, claims the welfare board.

"These problems are pervasive in that they represent a drain on public assistance programs, inflate the costs of tax-supported medical programs, reduce employment opportunities for California residents and represent a further drain on the state's economy since a substantial part of the earnings are returned to Mexico," it says.

NAVY RECRUIT GRAD Fireman Walter A. Corrigan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul J. Corrigan Sr., of 13591 Hewes Ave., Santa Ana, had graduated from recruit training at the San Diego Naval Training Center and has been assigned to Interior Communication Electrician School, also in San Diego. He is a 1973 graduate of Foothill High School.

Bike License Clinics Slated

BUENA PARK - Bicycle licensing will take place at numerous parks and playgrounds between 1 and 2 p.m. Tuesday, according to the city parks and recreation department.

In addition, bike safety rodeos will be held the same day in the following parks: Larwin, 10 a.m.; Boisseranc, 2 p.m. On Thursday, rodeos will be held in Peak Park, 10 a.m., and Bellis Park, 2 p.m.

Also, a teen bike trip will be sponsored by the Buena Park Youth Center on Tuesday. Further information on the trip may be obtained from the center.

Immigration officials, the board contends, "are trying to do an effective job but are severely hampered by lack of knowledge and understanding among officials at the federal. state and county levels. They are further hampered by the failure of local and state jur-Isdictions to maintain adequate records and to communicate effectively with immigration authorities."

Who is credited with the Idea of first painting the white line down the middle of the highway to keep cars on the right side of the road?

> T.R.H. Anaheim

Your question led the Ol' Trouble Shooter on almost as merry a chase as you "boys" are likely to lead the friendly neighborhood traffic officer if you "whoop it up" too long at that pub, podnah, but he managed to come up with the answer.

Pope Urban X painted the first white line to control traffic. The Catholic pontiff painted a line across the center of the Ponte Vecchio (Old Bridge) in Florence back in 1024 as a solution to traffic jams in the center of the bridge. (Traffic in those days. didn't include automobiles.) The bridge traffic was composed of people, horses, other animals and carriages.

Laguna's 'Belching Bart' Soon Will Be A Memory

By DON CANTRELL Register Staff Writer

LAGUNA BEACH—Sometime this summer the Laguna Beach Lumber Co., 384 Forest Ave., the oldest surviving Laguna business operation, will signal the end of an era when it moves to a new location in Laguna Canvon.

And with it will go many fond memories about the late Joe Jahraus, who came to this community in 1902 and subsequently founded the lumber company in 1912 when he was 23 years old.

But the family traditions and historical mementos will not fade away following the downtown departure since his son Richard and grandson Joe remain in command of the operation and plan to expand at the new site along Laguna Canvon Road east of Canyon Acres Drive.

His son, whose friends call him Dick, said, "We're going to take our old desks and other keepsakes and build a kind of historical area in the new office."

Dick is also elated to learn from Plaza Development Co. officials, who plan to construct a $2.5 million commercial complex on the downtown site, that they plan to preserve the main lumber company building and convert it into a

This has been of considerable concern to many oldtimers since the main structure was deemed an historical landmark by a city council-appointed historical preservation committee

The elder Jahraus had been so impressed with the architecture in Normandy during World War I that, upon his return to Laguna, he commissioned Jean Egasse, a Norman, to redesign the lumber company building.

Another landmark feature is the 40-foot smokestack and incinerator. One of the new developers, William Lambourne, said, "We want to keep it, too, if the city will allow it, atlhough it does exceed the city height limit of 36 feet."

Dick said, "Most people lovingly call it 'Belching Bart,' but it hasn't belched any smoke since the county smog ordinance halted the operation."

He said, "In the old days it was amazing how many people would come over and make use of our incinerator. The banks used it to burn old checks and postal employes used it to burn stacks of outdated stamps. One old lady used to bring her dead cats down and throw them in there—and, when we found out, we decided to put a fence around it and lock people out."

His father, a one-time city councilman and water board member who once won a Freedom Foundation award. started out as "a pearl diver" at Hotel Laguna in the early days and used to ride up to Black Star Canyon in an old buckboard to haul soft coal back for the hotel, his son said.

Dick, who described his father as "a man with a great sense of humor and civic pride, remembered the time his dad started another lumber company across the street" to keep the business in town. If a contractor or builder got mad at him, he'd direct them to 'that other place' across the street."

His son laughed, adding, "Of course he was finally found out one day when he took some friends across the street to see his other store. One of the contractors who was mad at him (Paul Slacker) was upstairs and heard the conversation. He finally shouted down, 'Okay, Joe, you got me.' "

Dick, who has two other children, Jeffrey, 23, and Jennifer, 21, has many happy memories of his childhood in Laguna

He said. "I remember when we used to play football (1933-34) on the two-lane Coast Highway. We could hear the cars coming easily enough to get out of the way. There would be about one car every hour."

Dick, who served with the air transportation command during World War II, also recalled the days of Prohibition when the "rumrunners" would try to bring illegal liquor ashore "by way of Laguna's little coves where they could hide from the Coast Guard."

He said the most amusing incident "was the time when the Coast Guard caught up with one of them and sank the boat. It wasn't long before two guys I knew were out there diving for sunken loot."

Although he cherishes "the good old days," he believes. "The future of Laguna Beach is good. In fact, Laguna has always had a good future."

"I guess I'm relieved that The first graduating class the Newland Street route of Saddleback High school in won't be used, but I have mixed emotions over it," said Mayor Jerry Matney. "I fought very hard to get the Gothard Street route."

Matney was referring to get in touch pronto with Nantwo proposed routes for the cy Coash Reynolds at 557-0956 freeway. The "Newland" or with Patty Henry Dreher route, adopted by the state in 1968 and still technically the one that would be built runs south along Newland Street. The "Gotnard" route is the more westerly route, running south along Gothard Street. Some freeway development has been considered necessary for the development of the downtown area in Huntington Beach, according to planning director Dick Barlow. "An extension of the freeway to the downtown area would help make that area

Ed Selich of the department's advance planning division, said planners consider both "freeway" and "no freeway" possibilities in their projections for future traffic loads and road-building requirements.

When the Route 1 "Coast Freeway" was oropped by the state in 1972, Selich said, area planning departments learned not to depend on freeways in their planning.

Selich believes anyone de- peared unanimous in their veloping the downtown area "is going to have a pretty rough time doing anything down there without a freeway."

He pointed out another effect to be felt if the freeway isn't built is the crush of traffic on existing city streets.

The city's population, now about 150,000, is expected to level off between 230,000 and 250,000 by 1990. That will mean more cars on streets already crowded in the summer from the crush of traffic heading for the beach.

Without the freeway, the city will have to improve other major roadways, probably Beach Boulevard, Brookhurst Street and Pacific Coast Highway among them.

If Huntington Beach officials have mixed emotions about the freeway question, Fountain Valley officials apelation to the news that the Newland Street route probably won't be built.

"We're breathing a sigh of relief," said Don Contraman, planning director at Fountain Valley. Contraman said the Newland route was "the one that really concerned us."

"The other route (Gothard Street) wouldn't really affect us much." he said.

Mayor George Scott called the news "great."

"I say that because I was personally involved in working to move the adopted route to an alternate route," said Scott.

Another opponent of the Newland route was Ed Just, a former Fountain Valley councilman.

David Gubler of Newport Beach, who's running against Rep. Andrew Hinshaw, R-Santa Ana, in the redistricted 40th Congressional District race, has charged Hinshaw with a "blatant misuse of taxpayers' money."

Hinshaw, Gubler says, mailed 120,000 newsletters to residents that will not be in his 40th district until Jan. 1, 1975, when California's congressional redistricting goes into effect. The letters, Gubler says, were signed "your congressman."

This, Gulber claims, constitutes politicking and is therefore a violation of his franking privileges because Hinshaw is not yet their congressman.

The newsletter in question went to voters in Oceanside, San Clemente, Fountain Valley, Dana Point, Laguna Beach, Corona del Mar and parts of Newport Beach.

Those cities are now in the 32nd, 34th and 42nd congressional districts. Approximately 100,000 were mailed to voters in the 42nd district represented by Rep. Clair Burgener, R-San Diego.

tients off the hook in regard to responsibility.

"When Aetna or some of the other big companies decide not to pay, they just tell you they will see you in court," he said. "They aren't scared of any commissioner."

Payne said he believes hospitals don't have the stomach for handling the problem of whether a patient can pay before it becomes a collecting problem.

"I think you make a horrible mistake in extending credit to people just because they have group insurance when the insurance may not cover the real expenses."

He told the co-op California Medical Industries group at a Tustin Hospital luncheon that latest figures show the average patient's cost for hospitalization in Southern California is $150 a day, not including doctors.

"Some group insurance policies won't cover more than $30 a day. Find out what group plan the patient has at the beginning and what it covers," he advised.

The state commissioner said California is the largest insurance state in the union with 145,000 agents, 1,000 companies and $10 billion in premiums. He said his staff handles 64,000 complaints a year.

Payne said a bill is being introduced in the legislature which, if passed, would give the state authority to regulate Blue Cross and Blue Shield insurance plans. Pre-medical plans (Health Maintenance Organizations), in which complete pre-determined health care is provided for those who purchase special policies, received Payne's vote of approval provided there is "proper regulation" of the pro-plaint of the hospital representatives, the insurance commissioner said, "If insurance companies abuse you by holding up payments, let me know. We have great authority in this area, and we can call them in and take away their certificate of authority."

The highest outside contributions were $25 each from residents of Placentia, Northridge and Los Angeles. Former planning commissioner George DeJesus is a close second with $405, none of which is his own contribution. Contributions from residents and anonymous donors range from $5 to $25 with one $25 contribution from American Plastering Co. Orange, and a $10 donation from Lee F. Wilcox and Associates, Garden Grove. Two other candidates listing total contributions of more than $200 are Walter E. Plegel, an investment counselor, and Joshua "Josh" White, an Anaheim management consultant firm executive. White received $300, $100 of that from his own resources.

White listed $25 donations from Placentia Unified School District Supt. John Tynes, Gil Kraemer Jr. and Albert S. and Penelope Bradford.

Robert E. Davis, an advertising-public relations executive, and Jack D. Harrington, employed by a Garden Grove publishing firm, were the low

SWC Absolves Rice Of 'Illegal Tickets'

HOUSTON (UPI) - The an extensive investigation yielded "nothing of substance," Saturday cleared Rice University of charges that the school illegally gave football players free game tickets to sell for profit.

"Rice has been absolved," said Conference President J. Neils Thompson of the University of Texas. "We're through."

Cliff Speegle of Dallas, executive secretary of the ninemember conference, said that a thorough investigation was conducted by officials, a full report was made to the board and the issue was closed. He gave no specifics of the investigation which began last year.

The conference delayed action on a proposal to allow a split basketball schedule, with the winner of the first part playing the second half winner for the SWC title.

"I would think that the situation was blown all out of proportion," Thompson said of the Rice incident. "The investigation yielded nothing of substance that you could put-a finger on and have a conference violation," Thompson said.

It (the investigation) simply did not result in evidence giving credence to the allegations made."

The charges resulted from allegations made in the book "Saturday's Children," an inside look at college football made at Rice University during 1971. Author Giles Tippette studied the Rice team and coaching staff while Bill Peterson was head coach at the Houston school.

Data Center Pact Approved At Fullerton

FULLERTON-A joint agreement with the North Orange County Community College District for data processing services for the 1974-75 fiscal year has been approved by trustees of the Fullerton Union High School District.

The cost to the high school district will be $193,583, up from the $171,607 for the current school year, said Harold L. Throop, assistant superintendent for business services. The college and high school districts each pay 50 per cent of the cost.

The increased cost for the coming school year is for added personnel and machine rental, Throop said. The administration believes the joint operation is advantageous to the district, said Throop.

A first attempt to invoke cloture on the public financing bill failed by four votes Thursday.

Mansfield told reporters that if Tuesday's cloture bid fails, there will not be another try before the Senate's Easter recess, April 12-22.

The bill, designed to stop special interests from gaining political influence through intervention in election campaigns, would earmark for each major party candidate in a federal general election a campaign sum equivalent to 15 cents per eligible voter.

The primary campaign subsidy would be 10 cents per eligible voter.

Private contributions would be allowed, but would be limited to $3,000 for individuals and $6,000 for organizations.

More than 80 amendments are pending on the bill, most presented by opponents, and each must be debated and voted upon even if cloture is

SC Officials Seek Aid For Sewer Project

SAN CLEMENTE—The council has authorized a trip to Sacramento for City Manager Kenneth Carr, city engineer Phil Peter, and a consulting engineer, to seek financial assistance for a new $534,000 sewer interceptor line through the city.

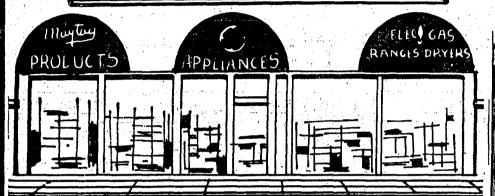

The sewer line will run from the south end of the city to the sewage treatment plant on Avenida Pico.

The city has planned to pay for half the cost of the line, with an assessment district formed to pay for the other half. The assessment district will include the Douglass-Pacific tract (Presidential Heights) and the new owners of a portion of the old Visbeek

Carr told the council that the city could possibly qualify under Public Law 92-500 for federal and state funding of a portion of the cost. He proposed the trip to Sacramento to explore the possibilities. He estimated the cost for the trip would be $150.

ORANGE—A $36.5 million 1974-75 budget-up 8 per cent salary and fringe benefit over this year's projected $33.9 million expenditure—has been accepted for study by trustees of the Orange Unified School District.

The board instructed budget analyst Dr. John Miller, financial services director, to complete a final preliminary budget for board action in mid-May.

The draft budget contains no additional projects or programs, Miller said. "It just continues the current instruction, maintenance and transportation program into next year."

The budget does not include the 15 per cent cost-of-living salary hike requested by the board is negotiating a package with the teacher's Certificated Employe Council.

The 1974-75 budget will meet rising inflation costs by using up this year's carryover reserve fund of $1.5 million, Miller said.

The district will pay for increased costs in fuel, utilities, health insurance, retirement payments, regular employe salary increases and almost all of the purchased products and services.

Last month, trustees were informed that local taxes would not match the rising inflation costs. The board approved a June 4 ballot proposal asking voters to approve a 34-cent tax override to raise teachers next year. Currently, an additional $1 million.

Easter Holiday Events

More than 25 supervised playgrounds will hold Easter activities Friday at 10 a.m. Exact locations may be received from the parks and recreation department. The Prentice Park Children's Petting Zoo will have "Easter hours" this week and will be open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily with "lots of bunnies" on display.

The senior citizens will hold an egg decorating contest Saturday at their club house. The noon contest is open to the public and Mayor Jerry Patterson will judge the event. "Entry fee" for each participant is six hard-boiled colored eggs which will be distributed to various children's organizations around the county.

SEAL BEACH Easter egg hunts will start at 9 a.m. Saturday at Zoeter School and Edison and Shapell Parks. Youngsters to third graders will be able to exchange paper eggs they find for candy eggs.

STANTON

An egg decorating contest will coincide with an Easter egg hunt. Children are invited to bring their decorated eggs to the Community Hall, where they will be judged while the children participate in an egg hunt. Eggs should be delivered by 9:45 a.m. and the hunt will start shortly thereafter. The Stantonites, a Seniors Citizens Club, is sponsoring the event. TUSTIN

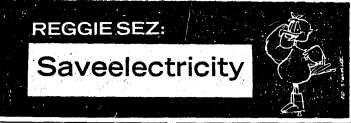

Two Easter egg hunts will be held Saturday at 11 a.m. The hunts, sponsored by the Jaycees, will take place at Pinetree Park and Peppertree Park.

VILLA PARK

There are no city sponsored Easter activities planned. WESTMINSTER

The Easter Bunny will be two places a once Saturday when he attends the 11 a.m. egg hunts at McFadden and Sigler Parks. The hunts are sponsored by the parks and recreation department and the Westminster Elks. YORBA LINDA

1967, I believed at that time that we had to have some kind of freeway. It made sense that one was necessary, at least from the information they provided."

Just said he preferred the Gothard to the Newland route because, among other things, the Gothard route was less expensive because it wouldn't have required the purchase of as much developed land.

Opposition to the Newland route developed among city and school officials, who said it would be the most expensive, would displace the most homes and people and would require Fountain Valley School District to move its headquarters.

Among those who hope the Newland route never will be a likely possibility is Mike Brick, superintendent of the school district.

Here's the perfect way to make' your money or securities do "triple-duty":

You will be helping a good cause — the health and well-being of your fellow man.

You will be rewarded with a substantial savings on your current income taxes, You can continue to enjoy the financial security of the money you contribute . . . with a guaranteed income for you or your family.

If this sounds impossible ... call today for the eye-opening story of Hoag Memorial Hospital's "Four Flexible Plans for Giving". You will be in for a pleasant surprise!

"Unfortunately, they (the state) didn't deal with a route that would have benefited the people," said Brick.

"It would have gone right. by the Fulton and Tamura schools, meaning those attending the two schools would be living on the other side of the freeway," he said.

At Coureges School, under construction at Magnolia Street and Ellis Avenue, the freeway would be "in our backyard," he added. He said the administration center at Talbert Avenue and Newland Street would have been directly in the path of an offramp.

It appears none of the local fears will be realized now that funds for the freeway have been cut, but the proposed route adopted by the state isn't officially "dead."

may be simply a matter of

"Considering the energy crisis and the amount of time it takes before freeway construction begins, it's unlikely that any building is going to take place there unless something unexpected develops," said Dick Friedman, of the state transportation department's Los Angeles office.

"Even if we had the money today, or if we changed our minds and switched to the route along Gothard, it would be 12 to 15 years before there was traffic on it," Friedman

Whether the state wants to stick with the Newland route. switch to the Gothard route or drop the subject entirely will be determined in large part by a study under way now at the Los Angeles office.

The study will include recommendations on whether the route alignment should be reopened for further hearings. It will go to the transportation department's headquarters in Sacramento, where department heads will evaluate it and make a recommendation to the California Highway Commission.

Final authority to scrap a freeway entirely rests with the state legislature, but the highway commission is empowered to change the alignment of a route.

Regardless of what happens to the freeway plans, other aspects of development are expected to continue in Huntington Beach.

Sentences, Fines Handed II Convicted In Obscenity Case

Eviction Of Family Is Price In 'Free Land' Offer To City

By STAN WULFF Register Staff Writer

-There is a piece of land in this city for which nobody seems to want to take responsibility.

It's a plot wedged between rows of new condominiums, modern houses, and a park running parallel to the railroad tracks.

The current owner, Westport Developers, is trying to give the land to the city. The city won't take it.

It is part of the long strip along the tracks that the developers were obligated to dedicate to the city for park purposes. All of the strip, now called Long Park, has been dedicated, except the small piece at 31371 Camino Capis-

"You'd hate to see anybody put out on the street," he said. But so far he has been

Westport, meanwhile, has taken no action since dedicating the strip along the tracks to the city last year.

The Rivera plot was refused by the city and the developers have left it at that.

"We're not going to throw them out, that's for sure," said one officer of Westport.

City Manager Don Weidner said he received one complaint from neighbors of the Riveras. He called in the county health department, which found the shack to be in substandard condition. No further action has been taken.

William Murphy city director of public works, said that one of the conditions of the Westport development was the dedication of the whole length of Long Park. The area still inhabited can not be dedicated until it has been cleared, he said.

What is the city going to do if the land is not cleared?

"If the developer can't comply with the conditions," said Murphy, "we'll have to work it out." He didn't elaborate further.

And if knowing the percentage of fat, muscle and bone in your body gives you one big yawn, consider this: Knowing your body's drawbacks and doing something about them can prolong your life. Quite a bit. As well as making day-to-day living more pleasant.

Cook, physical director at the Anaheim Family YMCA, has taken this premise and his machines to the basement of the police department on a pilot project that has the full blessing of police chief David Michel, a physical fitness exponent.

Beach Cities May Get New State Funding

HUNTINGTON BEACH-Assemblyman Robert Burke, R-Huntington Beach, has introduced a bill which would establish a $3 million state fund for use by local governments to finance beach-related services.

Coastal communities would be reimbursed "for the excess costs of providing beach-related services to beach visitors" under the bill, Burke said.

A community would be eligible only if it could be determined that at least 50 per cent of the use of public beaches within its boundaries was by non-residents.

Local governments controlling beaches also would have to establish that more than 10 per cent of the tax revenues raised were being used for beaches, the assemblyman

His proposal appropriates $3 million from the sale of state tideland soil to the state's public beaches fund. Revenues derived from tidelands oil is expected to increase dramatically this year, Burke said.

"Local taxpayers in the beach communities have furnished beach services to visitors at a great burden to themselves for many years," Burke said, adding that the proposed legislation would help relieve what he described as an "execessive inequity."

But Larry Harvey is confident the council will take a look at his plan-and eventually agree to a project that is satisfactory to the city, landowner and developer.

"I'm sure the city will think it is of sufficient importance to ask us to come in and talk about it," he said. "It's not benefitting anybody with the land just sitting there. I think we can work with the staff and come to a solution."

Planning commissioners rejected the proposed master plan for the 545 acres in February following two months of public hearings.

Harvey said he now is interested in discussing a compromise plan which calls for 220 acres of residential, 170 acres of industrial and 70 acres commercial.

"Generally, we are trying to answer the criticisms leveled by the planning commission," he said, and right now, he and his planning consultants are drawing up a more detailed plan for the industrial development.

"The planning commission felt there was a credibility problem with the industrial development," Harvey said. "We want to assure the city we are serious about this thing. We're going to develop the portion that is supposed to be industrial." If the master plan is approved by the council, Shapell Industries will develop the residential portion of the now industrially zoned land, which is located between Knott and Walker Streets and Orangewood and Cerritos Avenues.

OC Employment Sets Record During March

Orange County employment hit a record high of 651,600 during March, while unemployment figures dropped by 600 to 42,700 for the month.

The unemployment drop was less than expected, how ever, and the adjusted rate climbed back to January's 6 per cent mark, up from the 5.8 mark in February, the state Employment Development Department reported.

Non-farm jobs within the county also hit a new high in March, moving from 531,300 in February to 537,700.

Factory employment went up 2,300 during the month. according to the employment report; contract construction rose by 600 new jobs; agricultural employment jumped by 1,700; personal services by 1,600 and trade by 1,200.

Annual employment growth was reported at 6.7 per cent, a total increase of 40,800 jobs.

Plan Due Soon Police Data Center Plan OKd By Council

LA PALMA-An agreement to financially participate in a study of the establishment of a countywide law enforcement data center has been approved by the city council.

The project is expected to cost city taxpayers slightly more than $100, City Manager Burt Wesenberg said.

Proposed by the Orange County Police Chiefs Association, the project is being coordinated by the Santa Ana Police Department. Federal tax funds to help finance the study and develop the center reportedly are being sought.

Beautification Agency Action Delayed In BP

BUENA PARK - Final adoption of an ordinance establishing a seven-member city beautification committee was postponed by councilmen last week.

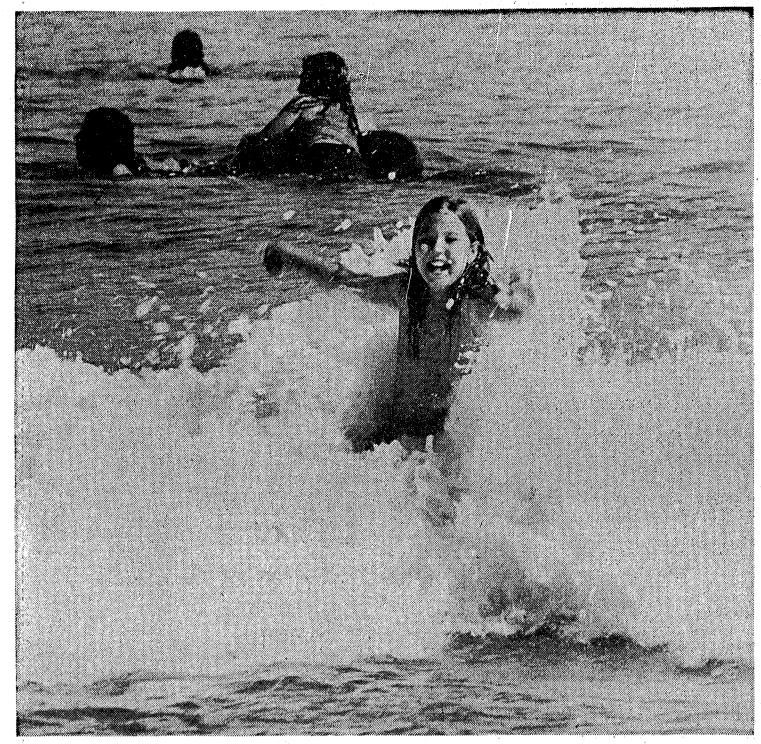

Councilmen decided to meet with persons interested in the proposal at a work shop session Monday night to iron out possible misunderstandings over the intent of the ordinance.

In another action, the council gave final approval to an ordinance which bans the use of chain link fencing in the Bellehurst area.

Carl Harvey Carnival Set

SANTA ANA-Food, game and entertainment booths will be featured in the annual "Spring Carnival" of the Carl Harvey School, 1325 E. Fourth St., on April 26.

The carnival runs from 2 to 8 p.m., with a dinner planned between 5 and 7 p.m., said Mrs. Jean Stevens, chairman for the sponsoring Parent-Staff Organization. The 91-student school serves orthopedically handicapped students. from Santa Ana and the southern part of the county.

The balmy weather at Orange County beaches the past several days has brought a summer atmosphere to the coastline from Seal Beach to San Clemente. Register photographer Gary Ambrose couldn't resist spending the day looking for a hot-weather picture.

SA Astronaut Carr Convinced Space Exploration Beneficial fish on earth, as well as locat-Because of the versatility of

By VERN PERRY Register Staff Writer

SANTA ANA -- Attempting to convince someone not interested in science that space exploration can be beneficial to everyone is not an easy

But it is a task that astronaut Gerald P. Carr accepts as a labor of love.

The most common argument against space exploration is that the tax money could be better spent curing ills on earth instead of going to the moon, he said.

Carr, born in Colorado and raised in Santa Ana. disagrees. "No one ever took any money and dumped it on the moon," he said recently.

Pointing out that the money spent on the exploration of space goes to materials and wages, Carr - whose short height and thinning hair do not conjure up the stereotyped image of an astronaut - said the actual amount spent is less than 2 per cent of the national budget.

And that, he emphasizes, "is a very small amount for what we get in return."

Just what the American people get in return is a rapid increase in medical, geological, environmental and meteorological knowledge that aids in curing the ills of the earth, says Carr, who served as commander of the final record-breaking 84-day Skylab mission.

In addition, the astronaut takes pride in pointing out that observations from space crops, forests and schools of ing mineral deposits of either minerals or petroleum. However, he said Skylab also proved that it is not only feasible, but practical for construction to take place in space because of the lack of gravity.

"We did some welding in space and ended up with perfect welds - no bubbles. If you have some very, very delicate instruments to make, it might be best to make them in space because it's a better environment. We also find that if you're going to grow erystals — for transistors and electronics — that these tiny items will grow better in space because gravity doesn't deform them," Carr said. While such knowledge has far-reaching implications for the average man, Carr fondly recalls that the Skylab mission aided him in gaining enhanced personal insights into his relationship with his fellow man.

All too often, the astronaut said, scientists tend to develop "rather sterile" ways of dealing with people as if they were objects devoid of thoughs or feelings of their own. However, while on the Skylab mission, he said his attitude changed drastically and he came back with a much more personal feeling for his fellow human beings.

"This, I'm sure, is not a feeling unique to me," Carr said. "You get into orbit and you begin to realize the magnitude of what you are seeing are valuable in monitoring and you begin to realize how small and insignificant man is compared to some of the othyou begin to become a little more concerned with the humanistic aspects."

In addition to gaining a new respect for his fellow man, the Marine lieutenant colonel astronaut said he also came to understand better the relationship of man with his home — the earth.

Carr, who is married and the father of six children including two sets of twins, said he and his fellow Skylab astronauts — Edward G. Gibson and William R. Pogue could not help but notice how much of the earth is covered by water, deserts, snow and ice and not inhabited by man.

"We began to realize that as big as this earth of ours is, man is rather clustered up in the various temperate zones, areas that are hospitable to man and his life. So, here we are with our population growing and man is kind of jammed up in all these little places," Carr said.

It was then, he says, that he suddenly realized "that if man is going to survive on this earth, he's got to get into harmony with his fellow man and his environment. We have to learn to conserve and to love."

Even though there will be no more Skylab missions for Carr to participate in, the astronaut is not finished participating in the U.S. space program As soon as he finishes debriefing NASA scientists and officials on the Skylab mission, probably in July or August, Carr hopes to join the space shuttle program.

The space shuttle will take off vertically on a rocket from Cape Kennedy and carry men, satellites and equipment up to orbit and back down. The shuttle will land at a $28 million 2 mile-long landing strip at the Florida space facility.

According to Carr, a single space shuttle "will make as many as 50 flights a year." He said that, although the shuttle program is designed to begin in 1980 and last only seven years, it is feasible to and trying to get radio signals bransport various modules in the craft and "build a space out there is a perfectly natustation in orbit around the er forces on this earth. Then the shuttle, women will have a chance to break into the formerly all-male space program. "The shuttle project, as I understand it, is being designed with women in mind. By the time we get into the program we will have women on the crews," Carr predict-More immediate in the future of this country's space program is a joint U.S.-Soviet Union orbital docking program that will give the two countries the capability to rescue astronauts of either tons, the astronaut said. Beyond the practical aspects of the joint mission, Carr said it will "prove that two countries with different ideologies and politics can, indeed, find some common country in emergency situaground of operation." Although NASA has planned no more mannea space missions beyond the joint docking project and the space shuttle program, Carr predicted that unmanned probes of the solar system will continue.

"Right now, for the next 30 or so years, I would guess that we certainly are going to continue with deep space probes. They're going to be unmanned, but sooner or later we're going to have to put man out there because man has got to be out there to make the decisions and use his versatility to get the job done," he said.

Carr admits he doesn't know if the American people can be convinced that even further probes, such as attempting to make radio contact with other intelligent life in the universe, are practical, but he said such projects are "natural human instinct."

The astronaut said that such human instinct should be recognized instead of simply being written off as impractical. "Man is a dreamer. If he didn't dream, if he didn't have some ambition we wouldn't be where we are today," he said.

"To my way of thinking, the idea of exploring deep space and trying to find somebody ral, human drive that man has." Carr said.

Konwiser Corp. here has abandoned plans to build a condominium on the property now occupied by the Balboa Fun Zone, a company spokesman said.

The firm has asked the planning commission to amend the city general plan to provide for commercial rather than the currently designated residential use of the one-acre bayfront site.

Set In Orange County

May, 1973, to approve a proposed 47-unit condominium project, but the development was later rejected by the regional and state coastal control commissions, even though ty firm scaled the project down to 33 units.

This left the firm with the options of changing the project or appealing to the courts.

The commission is scheduled to consider the general City council voted 4-3 in plan change in May.

'RETIRING' AT 60

Fullerton Teacher Turns To Travel

By CHARLES GOULD Register Staff Writer

BREA—"As the years go by I'm always surprised I'm still here," said Lydia Templeman, retiring after eight years as student counselor at La Vista continuation school in Fullerton.

"Ever since I can remember, I've been doing the improbable. People used to predict I'd come to a violent end. Well, I turned 60 last November, and I'm still around."

Now another career calls this sprightly, adventurous mother who worked as reporter, columnist and foreign correspondent before coming to the Fullerton School District 18 years ago.

Leading travel tours is her assignment starting July 1; she's taking a group of Americans to Russia and the Orient.

She has travel in her blood (her parents migrated from Italy to Australia where she was born). Since then, Mrs. Templeman has seen many countries around the world. The upcoming trip to the Soviet Union will be her first.

In 1949 she and two other women here formed the Brea Travel Service. It's still run- Mostly, my work is getting ning, and thriving, and "taking anywhere from 15 to 25 municate. All I have to sell hours a week of my time."

"But it's my security in retirement," she adds.

Recently, fresh and voluble after her "30th or 40th" counseling session of the day, she chatted about herself, her job, and the youths she says she tries to "motivate into becoming useful citizens."

Here are some samples:

-"I was in Europe doing graduate work in the 1930s when Hitler and Mussolini were going full bore. I got a job with the Australian Associated Press; wrote a lot about everything—even took pictures with a Brownie Hawkeye camera I got with cigarette coupons.

"I did many foolish things, and some of the things I wrote weren't popular with the authorities and they ordered me removed."

One impression she keeps is that of Italian soldiers with rifles and guitars slung over their back marching through Rome on the way to Ethiopia. "The band was playing 'Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf," she said.

-"Kids today," she thinks, "deserve a lot of respect. Some have problems that would have crippled me. But somehow they forge ahead. parents and their kids to comhere is motivation."

parents. We all try to give our children material things we didn't have, and we miss the boat. I tell my kids, we've made every mistake in the books but we're trying." But there's this, too:

> "Often it's too much, too soon; that's the big problem. Sometimes I believe some of them want to do everything before they reach 30."

-How can schools be improved? Can they be improved? After 30 years of teaching here, in Michigan and Australia she's convinced "the school system that is best for the student is the continuation school system." "I know what individualized programs can do. We have kids who couldn't make it in regular school, yet here they VANCOUVER (UPI) -Striking firemen at British Columbia's ten major airports defied a federal return-to work injunction Saturday, leaving commercial air traffic in the province at a standstill for the second day.

Don Duthie, president of Airport firefighters Local 202-19 of the union of Canadian Transport Employes, said the 96 firemen who walked off

"You can't blame just the go through four years of high school in three.

"I'd rather see 10 schools like this one than five of those big "educational factories" as I call them. That is where the system fails, I think."

Mrs. Templeman spends her spare time with her husband, Bruce, and son, a student at Cal State Fullerton. She was a national tennis champ in her Australian college days and still likes to "get on the back line and swing away."

She said she begins retirement satisfied.

"I have absolutely no regrets," she said. "I wouldn't change a single day. I have 362 students and everyone has a problem. But I feel I've done my share toward contributing to the schooling of youth. I won't stay awake nights worrying."

Airport Firemen Defy Injunction

the job early Friday would defy the injunction.

Syrian Troops Fired On By Israeli Planes

By United Press International

Israeli warplanes carried out their first strikes since the October war Saturday, hitting twice at Syrian troops who Tel Aviv said had crossed the cease-fire line in the 26th day of battle on the Golan Heights front. Syria called it an escalation of the fighting.

The Israeli command said all of its planes returned safely after blunting an attempt by about 40 Syrian infiltrators to capture an unmanned promontory on Mt. Hermon in the 325-square mile bulge of the heights captured by Israel in the 1973 war.

Artillery and tank duels raged along several sectors of the front but neither side reported casualties in the renewal of the daily battles prior to the opening of negotiations to separate forces there and defuse the conflict.

The Syrians said two Israeli planes made two attacks on Mt. Hermon positions in what military sources in Damascus described as an escalation.

There is approximately one dog for every seven people in Orange County. Problem: If every other dog bit every other person, how many cases of rabies would be reported? To reduce the possibility of an epidemic, in such an unlikely situation, the Southern California Veterinary Medical Association is sponsoring 24 rabies vaccination clinics for dogs throughout Orange County April 16 through May 16.

The Orange County chapter of the association has announced times, dates and location of the clinics and countv residents are invited to bring their dogs, four months and older, to receive shots for a charge of $2 each.

Dr. Robert H. Haight, supervisor of veterinary service at the Orange County Animal Shelter in Orange, said 18,00 or more dogs are expected to receive shots this year. He said that since the animal control program in Orange County was begun in 1955, there has been no rabies epidemics. "In 1955-56, we had 45 rabid dogs and one cat and the cat lived with a dog," said Dr. Haight

"In the past year, we had no cases of rabies reported among animals, except for three bats." The air strikes came six

FUNERAL DIRECTORS & CREMATION

How to Reduce Today's High Cost of Dying

The Neptune Society is the alternative to the more costly involved mortuaryfuneral-cemetery system. After 100 years, it is the answer to America's high cost of dying. The Neptune Society provides a simple dignified cremation service with dissemination at sea. There is no need for embalming, cosmetology, casket or grave. Your Social Security or Veterans Administration death benefit may cover our complete service. Our literature tells the complete story of our society. Write or Call:

saves gasoline!

Everyone's talking about the Energy Crisis. Well, Oakwood can provide some of the answers to those rising gasoline prices. Consider these ideas:

1. Four convenient locations close to work.

2. Easy access to major freeways.

3. Walking distance to shopping. 4. $1 million in recreation. You won't have to leave Oakwood on weekends or in the evenings. There's swimming, tennis (free lessons, pro & pro shop), billiards, 2 health clubs, saunas, golf driving range, color tv theatre, saunas, party room, etc. 5. Plus full-time activity director, parties, Happy Hours, mid-week dinners, lectures, sports tournaments, BBQ's, complimentary Sunday brunch.

There are also beautiful singles, 1 & 2 bedrooms, furnished & unfurnished. Rents from $145. Prices vary by location. Come in and ask about our "NO RENT RAISE GUARANTEE."* We will not raise your rent for at least 12 months from the date you move in. No lease required. Sorry, no one under 21 and no pets. Models open daily 10 to 7. Move in this weekend-and start your own gasoline saving program at Oakwood.

You're missing out on the only rental apartments in exclusive Huntington Harbour.

A limited number of spacious apartments are now available at Harbour Lights.

In addition to lush landscaping with streams, waterfalls, quiet ponds, flowerlined pathways, gazebos and spacious open areas, you get an apartment with a private balcony, thick shag carpets, large master bedroom suite, walk-in closets, fireplaces in larger models, a complete GE buffet kitchen, and air conditioning.

There's a large swimming pool, recreation grounds, huge fully-equipped club house with pool and game rooms, 2 saunas, health club, kitchen, fireside lounges and great neighbors to share it with. The beach, sailing and tennis are all nearby.

GRANDMA SHOULD KNOW. Ballet classes aside, Park West Apartments represent an unbeatable value to Marion. She should know. She's a first-rate real estate salesperson, an expert on rental values. That's why she selected Park West, in the village of University Park in the new City of Irvine. Marion knows the value of living in a masterplanned community. For today, and for tomorrow. Because her children and grandchildren are frequent weekend and vacation visitors, Marion chose a two-bedroom apartment in Park West's family section. The kids have tot lots and a wading pool to play in, plus a Junior Olympic pool, And for Marion, there are card rooms and a health spa, as well as art, bridge and yoga lessons. Of course there are separate living and recreation areas for "adults only". Marion values the generous bulk storage space that comes with her apartment — and the privacy of her balcony. All the things that Park West awans. And all me friendships that grow there. If Park West sounds like something you'd like to know more about, come see. Separate sections for adults and families. From $180 monthly. On Culver Drive just off the San Diego freeway. Look for 3883 Parkview Lane. Or call (714) 552-9200.

NOW: Two bedroom, one bath, family apartments now available. From $225.00

New Home Prices Expected To Soar Before Year's End

Doug Coleman of Martin Public Relations made a survey of 266 resales for the Mission Viejo Company.

All 266 resales occurred, Coleman said, during the 12month period from March 1973, through February, 1974, with the exception of the months of June and July, 1973. Original sales figures for these two months were not readily available. Completion of the study showed that the typical home would have sold originally for $31,210, 3.27 years prior to its latest resale.

It's important to note the fact that a number of improvements, presumably made by the original owner, have to be allowed for. Such items as draperies, painting, landscaping and perhaps panelling all serve to increase the value of a home. It is only ute a share of the pace of appreciation of any new home man pointed out.

However, over that 3.27year period from original sale nal sale and latest resale. to latest sale (there may have been interim resales, but these have not been included in the survey), the typical Mission Viejo home would have appreciated 45.78 per was recorded. The average later for $41,305.

Typical resale price was for $56,543. $45,499, for an average price differentiation between the "new" sale price and the latest resale of $14,289.

Figures for the original sale price, the resale price and the duration from original sale to resale were researched and supplied to Coleman by the Santa Ana office of Title Insurance and Trust Company.

For six of the 10 months surveyed, the style of home was spelled out in the statistical breakdown. This allowed appreciation figures to be developed on each residential concept at Mission Viejo in 4.15 years for $49,644.

Palm Springs Condos Pushed

The Casa de Oro Tennis Community in Palm Springs offers condominium homes with tennis, swimming and other on-site recreation facili-

The Las Palmas District, where Casa de Oro is located, has been the haunt of worldfamous dignitaries and celebrities for years, the developers say. Residents are near enough down town Palm Springs to enjoy all the shopping and entertainment, yet are secluded enough for serenity, they report.

The homes at Casa de Oro are available in two and three bedrooms, in single level, split-level and veranda-level floorplans. Each model features central heating and air conditioning, wall to wall shag carpeting and built-in kitchen with oven, range, hood, disposal and dishwasher. Sliding glass doors lead to fenced patios or verandas. The condominium association at Casa de Oro provides for exterior maintenance, including painting, roofing, fencing and landscaping. This plan also takes care of the upkeep of recreational facilities—the tennis courts, three swimming pools, sauna and rec hall with fireplace, meeting room and kitchen. The El Dorado Homes division of Kaiser Aetna, developers of Casa de Oro, have set the current starting price of the project at $31,450.

The Casa de Oro Tennis Condomunity is located in Palm Springs, on Via Escuela, just west of Palm Canyon purchased over 16 acres of Drive; models are open from vacant land at Berry and 10 a.m. daily.

This weekend marks the grand opening of the thirteenth unit of New Barcelona homes at Mission Viejo.

Forty-six new homes are included in the new unit, many located on premium lots according to Steve Swanson, sales and marketing manager, Single Family Housign Division for the 11,000acre totally planned residential-recreational community in southern Orange county.

Over 600 purchase agreements have been completed for New Barcelona homes since this style of neighborhood was first introduced in April of 1972.

The New Barcelona neighborhood at Mission Viejo is designed to provide moderate cost single-family homes for young families.

Homes in the new unit are located north of Trabuco Road, just off Via San Gabriel.

Ranging in price from $28,250 to $38,450, the homes of New Barcelona are offered in three one-story and one two-story models with 14 distinctive elevations. Two, three, and four-bedroom models be reached by taking the San gineering, has announced the are available, and fireplaces tio-oriented, with deep rear yards designed for outdoor Alisos Blvd., and then left to tifled testing laboratory and exclusive and elegant Williamshire Homes in Tustin's residential west side, an alladult condominium offering, continues this weekend.

Eighteen of the dwellings were sold the first week they were on the market, the builders report.

Marked by old English architecture in the traditional sense, the grounds consist of greenbelts with mature trees, shrubs and plants.

An offering of Century Development Co., Williamshire was an apartment project originally, and thus contains the design and appliance features of those dwellings. The one and two-story homes vary from 1,100 up to 2,200 square feet of floor space.

Several floor plans, with single-level dwellings of two and three bedrooms and two baths, are offered. The larger two-level, three and four bedroom units have two and three baths and one bedroom downstairs. Some have fireplaces in the living room and also in the master suite.

All homes are complete with carpeting and draperies, have central air conditioning and custom-finished cabinets.

Each Williamshire home has a private patio and twocar garage. Recreational facilities within the grounds include a swimming pool and therapy pool, two saunas, a

Link Completed In Corona Area

Saffell & McAdam, Inc., Irvine building contractors, have completed Pacific Telephone's unique underground Metropolitan Junction Facility in Corona, the last major building in a $272 million cable system reaching 2,500 miles from a point near Chicago and St. Louis.

The one story, 30,000 square foot structure, to be completely underground, contains 480 tons of reinforcing steel and 6,000 yards of concrete in walls 14 inches thick.

It is designed to protect the sensitive telephone equipment and prevent disruption during a national disaster. Upon completion of the $10 million facility, the phone company will install a 150-foot microwave tower atop the site.

In the event of nuclear attack five steel blast doors weighing a total of nine tons automatically seal the building's exits and twelve blast hatches slam shut over its air vents to prevent the entrance of radiation. A self-contained supply of air, water, food, and fuel for a 21-day operation, as well as two turbine generators, will allow phone compaemployes to maintain ny service.

The cable, scheduled for completion in 1975, is engineered to carry up to 90,000 simultaneous calls, three times the capacity of any previous cable. It can also be used for television and picture-phone service. Another $4.8 million expenditure in cable and conduit will be made west of the Corona site to connect the facility to Orange and Los Angeles counties.

VA Financing Available At Wood Lane

VA financing Is now available at Wood Lane, new Kaufman and Broad development of single family homes in Riverside, according to Phil A. Moore, marketing director for the Southern California Divi-

Moore said that VA financing is available to all qualified veterans on a new $99 move in program.

"The plan does not require a down payment and the $99 includes all closing costs," stated Moore.

"In other words, qualified veterans can now buy a home at Wood Lane for only $99 in cash. Families wishing to purchase a new home do not have to wait until the down payment and the closing costs have been accumulated. They can now move into a new home at today's prices and hedge against inflation through the equity build-up derived from owning property," concluded Moore.

Wood Lane features three bedroom homes priced from $27,725.

Single-story designs have three exterior elevations of each plan with wood, stucco and stucco brick exteriors. The various plans were designed to meet the needs of most families and include fireplaces, double door entryways on some plans, formal living rooms, dining areas and master bedroom suites. Two plans have family entertainment centers that are located adjacent to the kitchen and have direct access to the back yard via sliding glass doors, providing comfortable and convenient outdoor cooking and dining.

All plans have a two-car garage that has direct or easy access to the home for safety and convenience during inclement weather. The washer and dryer area is in the garage along with special storage in either two or three distincspace.

The kitchens have nooks, dining areas or eating bars. All cabinets have a furniturelike finish and decorator butcher block formica counter tops. They are equipped with a garbage disposal, built-in brush chrome dishwasher, range, oven and hood. Features included in the purchase price are wall-towall carpeting in the living room, master bedroom and hall with tile on the other floor surfaces; decorator mirrors in the baths, fire-safe composition and all homes are prepared for air-conditioning.

To decide whether renting or owning is better for you, it advises, consider your place in the life cycle, the size of your family, your occupation, your financial situation, the housing market in your area, your personal preferences and your tax status in the light of deductions allowed for mortgage interest and real estate

You may want to rent, the Institute suggests, when: - You cannot estimate future housing needs.

-You want to become familiar with a new community before investing in a house. - You expect to move soon and-or frequently.

- You do not have enough money for the down payment, closing costs and other expenses involved in buying a

- You do not want the responsibilities of home ownership.

- You can find better housing for the amount you can afford to pay by renting.

Rental housing, the Institute notes, offers two important advantages-greater mobility and minimum responsibility. Should renting be the answer, the Institute offers some advice on how to make the most of it.

The most common types of rental housing include apartments, duplexes or townhouses, and individual houses.

requires the least amount of responsibility for the tenant. The landlord or management usually takes care of heating, yard and grounds, decorating, repairs, upkeep and maintenance. In addition, major appliances and laundry facilities may be furnished and rent may include some or all utilities. However, apartment living generally offers little or no private yard space, limited storage area, and less privacy than a house or duplex. Before deciding on an apartment, if possible, talk to other tenants in the building.

and the neighborhood. Duplexes and townhouses offer some private yard area, more living and storage space, and more privacy than most apartment buildings. However they do not come with the same services and equipment. Utilities may not be included in the rent and tenants often must take care of yard, sidewalks, heating, some repairs and upkeep.

Find out what they like and dislike about the building, the landlord or the management,

Renting a house usually provides more living space, better storage facilities, and greater privacy than other types of rental housing. Houses generally include a yard, parking space and possibly a garage. The tenant may be responsible for routine upkeep and maintenance, yard and sidewalks, screens and storm windows. He normally pays for utilities, heat, trash removal and other services and may be responsible for decorating and minor repairs.

Whichever you decide on, the Institute stresses the importance of checking carefully the lease, a written or verbal agreement between landlord and tenant.

A written lease — dated and signed by both parties — is a legal document which binds landlord and tenant to the terms stated in the agreement. A verbal lease for less than one year is binding in most states, but with no written evidence of the agreement, they are difficult to enforce. Before entering a lease agreement, find out and obligations you are assuming...what you may and may not do with the property ... what the landlord will and will not do for you, the Institute suggests.

Among the things to consider, it says, are the following:

- What is covered by the rent? Are any utilities included? Are decorating, window washing or other services provided without charge? Is garage or parking space in-

Apartment living, it notes, cluded in the rent? - Who is responsible for upkeep, repairs and maintenance? In apartments the landlord is responsible for the building and major plumbing, electrical and structural repairs. In houses the landlord usually assumes less responsibility. Find out what obligations you assume before you > sign the lease. -How and whan may the lease be terminated or renewed? What notice must you give if you plan to move when the lease ends? Is the lease automatically renewed if you fail to give notice? How far in advance must you renew? What notice will you receive if the landlord intends to change the terms of the lease or renewal?

-What happens if you must move before the lease expires? Can you sublet? Is there a fee for subletting? Normally, you must carry out the terms of the lease if the new tenant fails to do so unless the landlord offers a responsibility if you are transferred before the lease expires?

- What extra costs must you pay? Is there a penalty for paying rent late? Must you make a security deposit? If so, how much and when is it to be returned? Can the rent be increased before the lease expires - when, by how much, under what circumstances?

- When may the landlord or his employes enter your home? The landlord has a right to set up reasonable conditions for his entering unless an emergency makes it necessary to enter without your permission.

- What rules and regulations must tenants follow in using the property? Can you decorate, keep pets, carry on business, install carpeting or equipment? What rules govern use of facilities in the building? Are restrictions reasonable? Are they enforced?

- Does the landlord have lein on your property? A landlord's lien permits him to hold your furnishings and belongings until you fulfill your financial obligations to him.

- Are all agreements writwhat specific responsibilities ten into the lease? Don't rely on verbal agreements. If the landlord makes promises that, are not in the printed lease. ask that they be written and attached to the lease.

It pays to shop carefully for suitable rental housing, the Institute stresses, particularly when you sign a one, two or three-year lease. To find rental housing, it suggests, read classified ads in newspapers, advertise your needs in the 'Natural-Type Parks' Mark Casas Grande

Future residents of Casas Grande Homes will be able to enjoy one of the most beautiful "natural type parks" in Orange County, according to Joseph A. "Marty" Martinez, president of the home builder firm, Delta Contractors, Inc.

The park—tentatively named "El Modena Lake" — will cover some 13 acres including a three acre lake with an island and crossing foot bridge.

"It will be a natural type park with paths, a small running stream, picnic tables, native plants and trees," Louis Hernandez, assistant director of the City of Orange Parks Department, said. Hernandez, who was instrumental in the design of the park, estimated that the citycounty project would be completed in four to six months.

The new park is just to the north of Casas Grande Homes at Jordan and Hewes Streets where one and two story, four bedroom residences are priced from $51,900, including wall-to-wall carpeting. Conventional loans are available at favorable rates.

Architecture of the single family residences is a pleasing mix of California and Spanish design.

Deeply recessed entries and wide overhanging roofs are featured. Wrought iron work and textural stucco along with the use of thick wooden beams, brick and stone accent the play of exterior light and shadow.

Other advantages include gas built-in double ovens with black glass doors, light control and continuous cleaning heating throughout are also included for comfortable living. Walls and ceilings are insulated to save energy and the homes are prepared for air conditioning. Also included are built-in trash compactors, ceramic tile drain boards, luminous ceilings, water line installed for ice maker, pass thru windows to patio serving bars. Wet bars with glass shelves are in family rooms.

Fireplace Wall Storage Site

The hearth always has been a favorite gathering spot in the home, but the popularity of a blazing fireplace has soared even higher in these days of lowered thermostats.

With more attention being focused on the fireplace wall, it's a prime candidate for a spruce up and in many homes a likely spot for building in more storage or shelves.

One couple transformed the living room fireplace wall into the handsome focal point of their home by paneling it with western hemlock and flanking the fireplace with cabinets and bookshelves.

VACATION HOMES: Investigate Before Investing

Copley News Service

That summer cabin or winter ski chalet of your dreams might not be as good an idea for the average investor as it

It's more than the current energy crisis that compels many expert observers, and analysts to discourage persons eager to invest in second homes or properties.

"At least think about and understand what you're getting into," cautions Lewis W. Ground, a real estate broker who is involved in selling vacation homesites at Bigwood, a 700-acre recreational property development now under way in Sun Valley, Idaho.

"Let's face it—a vacation home is mostly an ego trip for the majority of today's middle-class investors, the man who decides he wants to be able to say he has a house set aside merely for recreation." Ground said. "It usually turns out to be an expensive and time-consuming luxury," he

Cooling Costs Reduced 12% By Aluminum Fins

NEW YORK-Aluminum fins, projecting three feet from the upper-story walls, reduce air conditioning costs for a two-story office building in Teterboro, N.J., by 12 per cent a year, reports an Aluminum Association publication.

Aluminum Developments Digest, a quarterly, reports that the fins, made of dark-' bronze anodized aluminum, serve three purposes:

Mechanically, they lighten air-conditioning loads by partially shading the glass, which is heat resistant. This shading annual air-conditioning fuel costs by about 12 per cent, according to mechanical engineer M. W. Smyth of Tellefsen & Mader, the architectural firm that designed the Esthetically, the fins break plane surfaces of the secondfloor-glass-and-aluminum curtain wall which is cantilevered out six feet over the first floor, brickfaced wall.

And acoustically, the finsprovide some sound attenuation from the roaring jet takeoffs at Teterboro Airport, a few hundred yards away.

Project architect Paul Staudt Jr. specified aluminum because of its architectural elegance, durability, and adaptability to field fabrication.

Selecting the best location for a vacation home is somewhat more involved than people think, most experts surmise. Most importantly, the vacation home should be located where there is activity the year around. Most homeowners cannot spend all their leisure time at their vacation homes and renting it out between visits becomes necessary to defray the constant costs involved in paying for and maintaining a property. A vacation home in a yearround resort area maximizes the potential to rent out the property when the owner is Resort homesites should be accessible to major transportation facilities in order to attract visitors who would rent the property from the owner when he is not using it. Like most determinants of property values, accessibility to transportation, especially airports and railroads nowadays, enhances the property values of any homesite.

Many vacation resort areas are already overbuilt with surplus housing and facilities. Checking out the supply and demand of housing is a must for the prospective vacation

Day Realty Plans 1,220 New Units

Charles P. Day, president of Day Realty and long-time resident of Long Beach, said last week his firm has signed contracts recently for 1,220 new homes and condominiums in Los Angeles, Orange and San Diego Counties.

Day, whose firm is one of the fastest growing real estate organizations in California, has among his projects Park Niguel, 550 units; Carlsbad Palisades, 350; Presidential Heights Estate Homes, 120, and 250 more townhomes at the highly successful Presidential Heights development high above San Clemente.

The veteran Realtor recently told a group of homebuilders that he predicts the growth of southern Los Angeles County will continue at its present rate into the 1980s. despite increasing land and building costs.

"There still is plenty of land for development," said Day, "but what we can look for is new uses for property to handle an increasing population density." He used the swing from dominantly single-family residences to townhouse and condominium living of the last several years as an example. Day reported sales have been good at all his projects, adding that excellent locations and quality construction has success. "Builders today are striving to give the new homeowner all the important amenities possible for an easier and more comfortable way of life," said

Claridge Hotel Revamp Set At Atlantic City

$15 million hotel-condominium-office building complex, which includes restoration of the Claridge Hotel and construction of two new high-rise buildings, has been announced by A. Peter diTullio, president of Hyatt International Corp., one of the world's largest hotel chains.

The development is being undertaken by diTullio individually, and not as a representative of Hyatt. He reported, however, that negotiations are under way for Hyatt Corporation to have a management contract to operate the Claridge.

Sale price for the 21-story, 450-room Claridge and nearby properties from M and M Hotel Co. was reported to be about $3.5 million. Restoration of the hotel will include converting it into a hotel and an apartment condominium, with completion of the 200 deluxe guest rooms and suites, public space and new restaurants slated for next October. Work has already started.

In addition, the project known as Park Place Plaza is slated to include a 19-story office building on the site of the present parking garage on Indiana Avenue and a 350room hotel and condominium high rise where the hotel's parking lot now is located on Park Place.

New SA Building

Construction has started on a 30,000 square foot building at the southwest corner of Yale Street and Carriage Drive, Santa Ana.

The $400,000 project develby Kenneth Bomar, consisting of office and warehouse space and equipped with air conditioning and automatic sprinkler systems, will be leased to S & S Header Co., an automotive firm.

YOU CAN STILL FIND

In a world of substitutes and compromises, you need to take more care than ever before in selecting a home. More than spending every dollar wisely, you need to seek out what seems like a lost art, quality craftsmanship.

No substitute for quality has ever been found at S & S. That's why buying an S&S home makes more sense. The quality is there. You can see it. You can touch it. You know it.

If you think you've seen quality before, look into one of these fine S&S communities today. You can still find quality...at S&S.

Realfors Plan Flag Kits For Homebuyers

As part of its "Make America Better" program, the East Orange County Board of Realtors has initialed a campaign to give away an American flag outfit, to homebuyers. But when they started the giveaway, they got a pleasant surprise.

At the Board of Realtors office, 1500 No. Grand Avenue, Santa Ana, a U.S. Flag flies daily from a pole in front, while another adorns a meeting room. Both flags were taken to Phil's One Hour Cleaners, 1006 E. 17th Street, to be cleaned as a part of the Board's patriotic program.

When a Board clerk picked up the flags, owner Phil Griffin told here there was no charge.

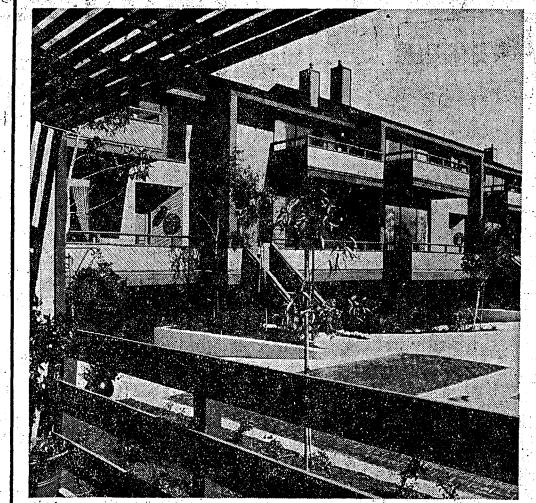

"If someone's going to use the flags," he said, "I won't charge them for cleaning. It's my little bit of patriotism."

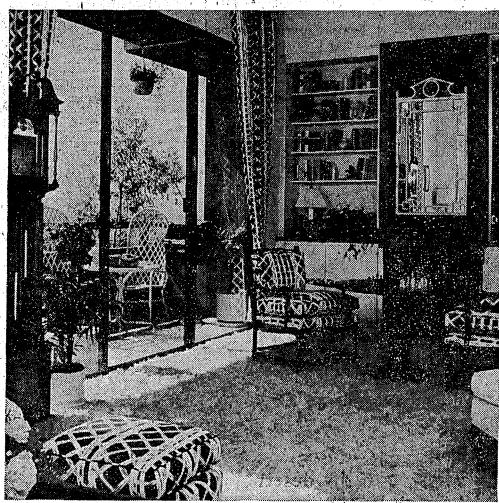

Also the owner of Phil's Dry Cleaning at 1288 Glenneyre Street, in Laguna Beach, Griffin said he has been cleaning American Flags free of charge in both shops for the last 10 years.

"And I'm going to continue doing so," he added. "It is important to me that the American Flag fly clean and proud. If I can help make that happen, I will."

Allan said the Realtors' group expected to distribute more than 5,000 American Flag kits during the cam-

Valley Realty Offers Buyers Warranty Plan

Valley Realty will issue its home buyers a one-year warranty against repair or replacement costs for the major systems in the home.

Irv Glasser, vice president of Valley, said the service started March 15, and is being offered exclusively to Valley Realty by American Home Shield, a publicly held company which introduced the idea two years ago in New Jersey.

The following major systems are protected under the plan: 1. Heating system 2. Plumbing system 3. Hot water heater. 4. Built-in appliances to include oven, range, garbage disposal and dishwash-

The advantages of the program reportedly pass to all parties of the sale. The seller is relieved of potential liability of repairs when the buyer takes possession of the property, he also will get better exposure of his home resulting in a sure sale as well as full price with the mortgage lenders feeling more comfortable about the property and appraisal of it, according to Valley. The buyer has nothing to lose and everything to gain as he doesn't have to worry about unexpected repairs, therefore is more apt to buy a "trouble free home," and be less vulnerable to financial disaster as it relates to his home's major systems, Valley says. And finally, the Broker has a special edge in advertising his homes as "trouble free."

Our first crop of garden homes is nearly harvested. Of 186 homes, just 32 remain. Back when we built them they were exceptional values. Now, with our close-out discounts, they're incredible values. Imagine getting a two-bedroom home within a half-mile of the coast for less than twenty-four thousand! But this is probably your last chance. Construction costs are rising so fast we hesitate to predict what the next group of Altamira Garden Homes will sell for. So if you're waiting to buy a home, the wait may cost you a lot more than time. Besides, you'll be missing out on the pleasure of living so near the water, surrounded by open space and fresh country air. You'll be missing the pool, the recreation facilities, and the acres of landscaped grounds. Instead of living in a brand new home with shag carpeting, fireplace, private patio, dishwasher, and professional exterior is maintenance, you'll be living somewhere else. Come to Altamira and join the 150 others who realized these homes are worth not waiting for.

TOMORROW'S HOMES WILL BE WEATHERTIGHT TO SAVE FUEL

By FRANK MACOMBER

Copley News Service American homes and office buildings of the future likely will look much as they do today, for architects design what people want. Yet most of them will be better insulated against the weather than today's structures, wood will be used wherever possible instead of concrete products because of its higher insulation quality and the home builder's option will be solar energy, or the socalled "heat pump" to warm and cool living space.

Architects and building contractors concede the additional insulation will cost more money-how much they won't estimate. But they point out that over the years it takes to amortize a new home, the extra cost often could be more than written off in lower fuel bills.

The Emergency Energy Act passed by Congress but vetoed by President Nixon included provisions for tax write-off incentives for homeowners who added insulation to their dwellings, either through stuffing airspace in walls or installing storm doors and windows to help keep the cold out in winter and the heat out in summer.

When the Senate sustained the veto, Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., introduced what he called a "bare bones" bill eliminating fuel price rollbacks and other provisions

H.W. Williams Appointed To Rossmoor Post

LAGUNA HILLS-Harry W. Williams has been appointed to the newly created position of director of commercial properties for Rossmoor Corp., Ross W. Cortese, chairman of the board, announced.

In his new position Williams is responsible for planning and developing commercial facilities adjacent to the residential sections of Rossmoor communities. During the next few years the primary thrust of the company's rapidly expanding commercial activities will be in the development of regional and neighborhood shopping centers, medical office buildings, health spas, recreational facilities and professional offices.

These activities are expected to provide Rossmoor with an important source of cash flow and an increasing contribution to earnings as they evolve, Cortese said.

Cost-free energy from the sun for homes and most other buildings has been the dream of scientists for many years. Hence the government, through the National Science Foundation, the Interior Department and other agencies, is spending millions annually to develop low-cost solar heating and cooling systems. So are many private research institutions. While the fuel is free, because it comes from the sun, distribution systems still are costly and far less efficient than they will be after a few more years of research and development.

A decade from now, however, the solar air-conditioning. system, for heating and cooling, likely will be as acceptable as conventional gas and electrical systems.

"Increased use of the electric heat pump is the key to conserving energy in the home," says Arthur E. Peltosalo, vice president of General Electric's power delivery

"The heat pump takes heat out of the air to heat homes in winter just as an electric refrigerator takes heat out of the food 'storage' compartment. In the summer the heating process is reversed to cool the home.

"Used for heating on a seasonal basis, the heat pump supplies about twice the heat equivalent of its kilowatthours. Used for cooling, it supplies six times the output of a gas airconditioner, for the same energy input at the home and twice the energy input at the power station.

"It is 5 per cent more efficient over-all than a typical gas furnace and 15 per cent more efficient over-all than a typical oil furnace."

The heat pump, which takes heat from outside air and discharges into a building, has been widely installed in the Southeast. Today more than 25 per cent of all residences in the areas served by Florida's two largest utilities are warmed by the heat pump, also called an energy multiplier in some regions.

Vernon A Rydeck, GE's manager of electric utility market development, says the case for the heat pump as an enegry conserver is even "A typical heat pump in Chicago saves more than twice as many heating kilowatt-hours as one installed in Fort Worth," he points out.

"The potential saving in oil offered by the heat pump may be very great. If all of today's 20 million oil-heated homes were heated with the heat pump, the net saving in oil to the nation would be some 40 billion gallons or nearly one billion barrels every year. "This is essentially equal to by 40 to 50 per cent."

Energy-conserving steps could include weather-stripping door frames and windows and adding needed insulation in inner walls and ceililngs. When warmer days arrive, close the fireplace damper when your fireplace is not in use and install awnings or other sun-protectors to cut down air conditioning needs.

Also, as days and nights warm up, be sure to lower your thermostate setting. For every degree (F) lower your setting, you'll save 2 to 3 per cent on fuel.

Such steps not only conserve energy but save money and reduce depreciation on

Other steps taken now to prevent future depreciation could save major repair costs and inconveniences. One housing expert who has recently conducted a study of effective depreciation-prevention measures suggests homeowners start by getting better acquainted with their property. Know where switches, drains, circuits and pipes are located.

The authority, Jackson W. Goss, president and chief executive officer of Investors Mortgage Insurance Co. of Boston, stresses the need to keep commonly used repair materials on hand at all times. Regular inspections of roof, windows, outside walls,

New Ideas Greet New Problems

James R. Piper With Model Of Heating System; Below Are Renderings Of Housing Development Project

Anaheim Firm Met By Prejudice In Pushing Solar Energy Theory

By VERN PERRY Register Staff Writer

One might think that a new method of heating apartment and condominium projects, which has proven cheaper to install and takes less energy to operate, would catch on rapidly.

However, this is not the case, according to James R. Piper, president of Piper Hydronics of Anaheim, who claims he has developed such a meth-

Piper claims he has to battle both the "prejudices" of the building trade and the utility companies.

Members of the construction trade are traditionalists and slow to change from proven methods in the heating of living space, Piper said. The utility companies, on the other hand, are concerned about the new method because they are vying for profits to be made from the traditional system and the Piper method would cut into those profits, he claimed.

However, despite the skepticism of the building trades and the opposition of the utility companies, the Piper heating method has started to gain ground. He said more than 1,000 apartment units in the central California area now are utilizing the system with "100 per cent satisfaction" and the seven-man firm, at 2895 E. La Palma Ave., expects to gross approximately $1 million this year.

Basically, the heating of an apartment complex is accomplished by keeping water, which runs through a 1½-inch copper pipe loop, at a constant. 140 degrees Fahrenheit. The heating of the water is achieved by use of a roof-top boiler for every 10 to 16 apartment or condominium units. The boiler does not store water as does a conventional gas water heater, but instead uses a thermostat to keep the continuous flow of water, including cold water added to the system to make up for the hot water used by residents, at the 140-degree temperature, Piper said.

Although the roof-top boiler uses gas to heat the water, it does not store water as regular water heaters do and is more efficient because the water is heated as it is continuously passed through the copper pipe, he said.

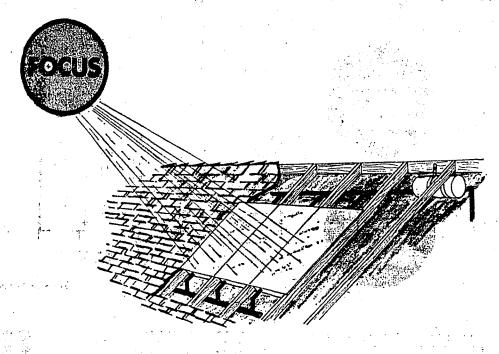

To convert the 140-degree water running through the pipe to heat for an apartment or condominium unit, the Piper method works in conjunction with the construction design of a pro-

The copper pipe runs perpendicular through the joists that separate the lower apartment unit from the upper one. Since the joists are blocked in by the floor of the upper unit and the ceiling of the lower unit they, in effect, become ducts, Piper said.

One duct is used for heating each unit. This is accomplished by having the copper pipe run into a series of heat induction coils in the duct. At one enc of the duct is a vent with a blower. attached. When the thermostat signals that heat is required, air is blown down the duct and across the coils. The air then becomes heated and is passed back into the apartment or condominium unit through a vent at the opposite end of the duct. Piper said.

As the hot water in the pipe is used. to heat each unit its temperature is lowered. As it passes through the heating coil for the last unit it is sent to the roof boiler where it is mixed with additional water and automatically reheated to 140 degrees before it begins its journey back to the first unit, Piper fit of the system is that, "The 140-degree water in the system is domestic tap water. Instead of two complete piping distribution systems, there now is one. And that one piping system contains no more material nor requires any more labor than if it was installed only to distribute the tap water. The copper water tube boiler provides both heating and hot water, which means it replaces both the tank-type water heater and the furnace."

Other advantages of the Piper system, he said, are that hot water is constantly available and that space, usually taken up in each apartment unit by a hot water heater, can be utilized more effectively.

Another benefit is that the Piper system does not dirty the wall around the vents as do conventional forced-air heating systems. Piper said this is because forced-air systems char circulating dust particles which, in turn, dirty the wall. He said that with his system not enough heat is generated to char the dust particles, thus eliminating the dirty walls associated with forced-air heating.

In addition, Piper said that government officials have estimated that by turning the thermostat down from 72 degrees to 68 degrees, as recommended by President Nixon because of the energy crisis, energy consumption is reduced anywhere from 5 to 10 percent. However, he claimed that running the Piper system at a constant 72 degrees will save an estimated 50 to 70 per cent of the energy required to heat the living space.

"The advantage of combining the domestic tap water system and heating system into one pipe is so enormous that better than standard materials and equipment may be used and the builder still saves money," Piper said.

Just how much money the builder will save depends on whether he compares the cost of installing the Piper system to the cost of installing an electrical or gas heating system. Piper claims that if an electrical heating system is planned the builder can save from $100 to $125 per apartment unit by using his heating method. If gas heating is involved, the savings would range form $200 to $225 per unit, he Piper first installed the system in his home in Palos Verdes in 1967 and immediately applied for, and received, the patents on the heating method. A building contractor at the time, Piper now 42; was approached by a corporation which wanted to utilize the patent. However, the company went out of business shortly thereafter and in 1971 Piper, who still held the patents on the system, moved to Orange County and started his own firm.

That firm does not actually install the heating system in apartment or condominium projects. Instead, Piper works with developers and sells them the idea and then aids them in designing it into their construction projects. He said that there are a number of companies which now install his system for builders.

Piper is the first to admit that coming up with a practical, inexpensive, power-saving heating system was not easy. For example, he said the blower used to "push" out air over the coils to heat an apartment had to be designed so that it would not vibrate and cause excess noise. This problem was solved by utilizing a rubber spring support system that allowed the blower to absorb the vibrations. Piper compares the system to that used on a stereo turntable.

Currently, Piper's heating system, which also can be used for airconditioning with the addition of coils used for cooling in an adjacent joist-duct, is only practical for apartment or condominium projects that are being constructed. However, Piper says the system is "extremely practical" for these projects because the method also can supply hot water for laundry rooms as well as heat swimming pools.

To show the extent of the cost savlings with the system. Piper compared standard forced-air heating system and the other having 123 units and using the Piper method.

During a seven month period, December to June, the apartment complex using the forced-air heating system had a total gas bill of $580, or an average of $5.18 per month for each unit. During the same period the complex using the Piper heating method had a total gas bill of $265, an average of $2.16 per month for each apartment.

"This comparison is most valid since the projects both have master metered gas, both have about the same number of units, and both are in the same geographical area," Piper said.

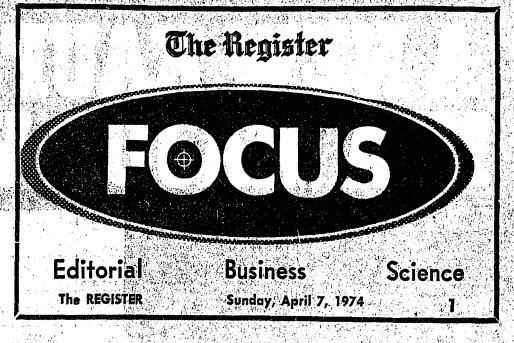

Converting existing structures to the Piper system is not practical at this time, according to its inventor. However, new housing tracts are able to utilize the system by running the 11/2inch copper pipe underground between the homes. In addition, a self-contained form of the system can be installed in individual homes as they are built.

If the current energy shortage eventually leads to the development of mass solar power sources, Piper said he will be prepared for the conversion. In fact, he claims the "application of the system to solar energy is a natural? because it further reduces the cost of heating the water to the required 140

Piper explained that the cost reduction comes from the installation of a solar panel in or on the roof of the house or apartment which preheats the circulating water before it reaches the roof-top boiler.

Each 2- by 8-foot solar panel. he added, is built between the rafters of the portion of an inclined roof of a home facing south or southwest to catch the full rays of the sun. Electric, Steam Cars May Fit In New Life-Style

Despite shorter lines at gas station. pumps, the fuel cost crunch has triggered continuing interest in alternatives, mainly battery-powered, all-electric and even steam-propelled vehic-

A pair of New York inventors say they can mass produce an all-electric car or a hybrid. Dr. Victor Wouk says a prototype car could be plugged in a common household outlet and receive enough power in an hour to run more than 10 miles. Additional power, in the form of an alternate supply, would come from a gasoline-powered internal combustion engine that would kick in when the electricity ran short.

The use of electricity for the first 10 miles would handle the needs of the average housewife, who generally uses the second car for errands and suid short trips to the store. And it all uld eliminate the amount of gasoline usually burned on those gas-consuming jaunts. Would and Dr. Charles L. Rosen are working on their hybrid car on a grant from the Environmental Protection Agency. Their plan is the lone survivor an air pollution control experiment, but has been expanded into an alternative fuel source plan.

In 1900, when 4,195 vehicles were manufactured in the United States, less than one-third were fueled by gasoline. In that year, 1.681 cars were steampowered, 1,575 ran on electricity and 939 had gasoline engines. The most famous of the cars powered by non-gasoline methods was the legendary Stanley Steamer, reputedly the fastest car of its era. The Stanley Brothers, twins Francis I. and Freeland O., built their first Steamer in 1897, although they later admitted "We knew but little about steam engines and less about boilers."

Still, the company built more than 18,000 cars, which were famous for the instantaneous leap forward when the driver stepped on the throttle.

They were quiet, used little fuel of any kind and were pollution-free. And they were expensive.

The Stanley brothers believed in handcrafting each car. And the price of the vehicle could not compete with the innovative, assembly-line approach of Henry Ford's vehicles.

The last steamer rolled off the Stanley brothers' "unassembly" line in 1925. Today, steam-powered cars are found in antique auto shows and museum collections.

But the idea behind the steam auto has not been related to musty collections. Those theories are being brushed off and revitalized.

The initial thrust is focusing on electric and battery-powered cars. But the image of the old Stanley Steamer is looming over many of the discussions.

For example, Ford Motor Co. is developing the Sterling Engine, in which an external burner heats gas to drive pistons. Instead of steam, a type of hydrogen gas is used, providing the car with more pick-up and power.

The cost of the Sterling engine still is not competitive with gasoline-powered motors. But Ford spokesmen say they are investigating refinements.

Investigations into electric cars have been going on for more than a decade. Automakers expressed interest in the electric cars in the early 1960's, but enthusiasm faded as scientists failed to find a way to lower costs of the generating plants that would power the

Despite the problems, the electric car and its companion, the battery-operated car, still are receiving the most attention from automakers seeking an alternative to gasoline.

The all-electric emits no pollutants, but also doesn't have any zip. The electric engines just do not yet have enough pick-up.

And some automobile spokesmen say the electric car will only replace one sort of pollution with another.

General Motors President Edward N. Cole says the electric car will "simply transfer problems from the tailpipe of the automobile to the smokestack of the central electric generating station."

Yet, the investigation goes on. One company has built a boxy compact car, which sells for $4,600, including $350 for special batteries to power it.

In Brazil, the national equivalent to the Volkswagen may be a tiny batterypowered car you can plug-in like an electric toaster. It cruises at 30 miles an hour, costs less than one-fifth as much as a normal car to maintain, and seats two persons. It costs 15,000 cruzeiros, or about $2,500 in American money.

The car, called the Gurgel Electric, is being tested-marketed in Rio Claro, a suburb of San Paulo. It could be in full distribution next year.

Another test is going on in Birming ham, Mich., where an electric van is being examined. Preliminary data says the van has a top speed of 52 miles per hour and can go about 100 miles before re-charging.

The van, called the Copper Electric III, is powered like a golf cart. It is larger and designed for surface street usage. No widespread distribution plans are yet on the drawing boards.

Automakers Also Would Like Miracle

DETROIT (UPI) - You've probably invented a supercarburetor and then had it bought up by one of the auto companies so the fantastic device would never get on the market.

In one form or another, that story has been making the rounds for years. What with the state of the energy situation, it's getting even wider circulation.

The story usually goes something like this:

You heard from a friend who has a friend who knew a guy that somehow got a new car that was giving him 50 miles to a gallon of gasoline-or maybe 75 or 100 miles. It seems an experimental carburetor was accidentally put on the car.

When he took it back to his dealer, he was given an offer he couldn't refuse and another "supercarb" comes off the market.

"It used to be the oil companies that got blamed for trying to hide these miracle devices," said a Ford Motor Co. spokesman. "Now it's us."

An East Coast radio personality recently wrote to Ford and cited "three sources" as saying a special carburetor has been developed that allows gas mileage as high as 35 to 40 miles per

"One source said he got the demo by mistake and Ford refused to allow him to keep the auto," he said in the letter. "I understand it took litigation on your part to regain this vehicle."

Richard Place, emissions and power train product planning manager at Ford-better known as the company's economy expert-says he usually answers the letters by saying that rather than suppressing such a device, Ford would be fighting to be the first on the market.

"If we were aware of anything that gives us 20 per cent more in fuel economy-an advantage our competitors didn't have-we'd break down the Great Wall of China to get it on the market," says Place. "Any car with that kind of advantage would sell."

V-8 'Gas-Eater Turned Into V-4

Register Staff Writer

ANAHEIM-A 42-year-old radio telephone distributor-turned-amateur mechanic has changed his eight-cylinder "gas-guzzling" 5,500-pound luxury automobile into a fuel-saving economy

"I just changed the design of the 460 cubic-inch engine in my 1973 model Lincoln Continental Mark IV," said Art Garabedian, owner of Western Mobile Telephone Co., 200 S. Anaheim ୍ରଣ୍ଡ ବର୍ଣ୍ଣ ଅନ୍ତର୍ଶ ଅବସ୍ଥେତ୍ୟ ବର୍ଣ୍ଣ

"You probably won't believe me, but I'm getting about 17 miles a gallon around town now," he said.

The care is operating on four cylinders, instead of eight-and the engine still powers the air conditioning and power steering.

A few weeks ago, Garabedian converted the big V-8 engine into a balanced V-4 engine with the help of a skilled mechanic.

Since installing the converted engine, he's trimmed his weekly gas bill in half.

"It's almost like buying my gas back in the good old days at something like 25-cents a gallon," he laughed.

When the gas shortage first hit last summer, Garabedian began thinking about converting his V-8.

Garabedian checked published gas mileage statistics. The Mark IV was pegged at 8.9 m.p.g. in fuel economy tests, but he was only getting 7 to 8

Critic Rips Sun Power's 'Shady Deal'

This year's federal budget includes $36 million for research and development of solar energy. President Nixon has asked for $50 million in 1975.

In comparison, Nixon's '75 energy budget also seeks $725 million for nuclear fission research, $427 million for coal research and $169 million for nuclear fusion research

South Dakota Sen. James Aboureszk last week questioned whether solar energy is receiving its proper share. In fact, he questioned whether there is "a conspiracy" to keep solar power in the shade. To enclose Fix 2198 cather and the

through the glass it heats the box which in turn heats the copper piping. "Since cold outside water is fed into the piping system of the solar panel before going to the gas boiler there is good heat transfer," Piper said. The water is then stored in a 10 to 15-gallon tank placed between the solar panel and the boiler and is fed from there directly to the boiler.

Because the water is preheated naturally by the sun before it enters the boiler it takes less gas to raise the temperature to 140 degrees, Piper said. "If people want to install enough solar panels it is possible that the gas heater in the roof top boiler will go on very seldom," he added.

Although the cost for installing a solar panel in an under-construction home ranges from $500 to $700, Piper pointed out that use of the preheating unit eventually will pay for itself.

Ironically, one of the first businesses to inquire about installing the Piper system with the solar panel was a North Dakota electric company which is building a high-rise office building. However, the firm plans to use electric resistors in the boiler to heat the water instead of gas, Piper said.

Kendig Carburetor Still Wrapped In Controversy

LOS ANGELES (UPI)-The dispute still rages over the Kendig Variable Venturi Carburetor and it appears unlikely the matter will soon be resolved.

The developers of the carburetor insist it reduces emissions while increasing mileage, but its detractors contend it is not the "dramatic technological breakthrough" it is purported to become and signera to medical con

Pollution Controls Industries Inc., of Torrance, developers of the carburetor, say they need more time to work out some technical problems still plaguing their product.

"It is our position, that at the present time, we are not ready in our development work to attempt to meet the '75 California standards, in that we have not put forth our best effort," Haig Marashlian, president of PCI, told a state Assembly Transportation subcommittee in El Monte. "That is to say, our present effort is incomplete and we need more time to complete this project in order to meet the 475 California standards."

Marashlian says PCI is a small firm which needs financial assistance from other private sources or public agencies to complete its work on the Kendig

Perhaps the legislature should investigate who received the grants and what results have been regarding improving the air quality. I am also aware of two grants in excess of $1 million each made directly by the state Assembly. The same question can be asked here.

"I also asked EPA officials as to the possibility of a federal grant and was told the only grants available were to develop an alternative engine. No money was available for carburetor development. I also wrote two letters, to (federal energy chief) William Simon plus one wire over two months ago. To date we have had no reply."

Among the factors which Marashlian says make the Kendig carburetor a "technological breakthrough" are:

-A constant air-fuel ratio throughout the engine;

—Increased power and lower emissions at any altitude; and the sound of Elimination of any need for a

—A constant acceleration from idle to full throttle without hesitation.

Marashlian said the carburetor would be tested at independent laboratories before being resubmitted to the Air Resources Board, which concluded after week-long tests last month that "the Kendig carburetor (the third produced by PCI) probably causes emissions to be neither greatly worse nor greatly better than a standard carburetor," said Gerhardt Hass, chief of the Division of Vehicle Emissions Control of the ARB. Hass disputed Marashlian's claims and listed these drawbacks of the Kendig carburator:

-Emissions tests show some potential improvement in carbon monoxide and nitrogen oxide emissions. These data are to a large extent offset by a finding of unacceptable driveability (difficulty in starting and poor acceler-

-A loss of fuel economy of approxmately 18 per cent was measured:

The public statements and stories extolling the Kendig carburetor have been based on misinterpretations of verý little test data.

"We wish the Kendig carburetor were as great as they (PCI) say it is," Hass said. "We would be happy to give them another test."

Shoestring' Ends In Gas Tank

An Orange welder-turned-entrepreneur says he has the answer to"the lingering problem of gas shortages.

Al Stein, owner of Custom Tanks, 1203 W. Trenton Ave., for about $150, will install a 20-gallon, welded, 14gauge steel auxiliary gasoline tank in the trunk of a car in about three hours. He said he is selling about 350 tanks atmonth. From grants to all the to miss.

The tanks operate independently of the factory-installed gasoline tanks with a manual switch. Each installation complies with all state and federal auto emission regulations, he said. Stein, manager of a 12-man manufacturing and installation shop in a small industrial complex here, started his business "on a shoestring" a year ago. With $135 and well wishes from friends, the began installing tanks in campers and motor homes at an Anaherm service station. Today, his monthly gross income is reaching into the $40,000 range, and he

those with campers mounted on a pickup-are flocking to his shop for auxiliary tanks to carry extra gas for weekend jaunts, he said.

As for the future, he predicts Detroit probably will begin installing larger gas tanks in new cars next year. In the meantime, he hopes to sell a hundred thousand spare tanks for all types of vehicles on "older cars" over the next five years.

To Heck With Smog, Check The Vapor VENTURA (UPI) - Two Navy engineers think they have a partial solution to current fuel and pollution problems. As the term of the base of the second Herb Johnson and Bill Rose have taken a leave of absence from the Naval Ship Weapon Systems Engineering Station at Port Hueneme to develop a prototype of their device, the Vaparator, which they believe will replace the standard carburetor and smog equipment. "We have two immediate goals," said Johnson, an electrical engineer. "We hope to be able to meet the 1975 smog requirements without using any of the current smog devices, and we expect a substantial improvement in gas mileage." The Vaparator was tested on a 1965 Dodge Coronet with a 361 cubic inch, 8-cylinder engine. The mileage improved by six miles per gallon-from 14 to 20-after the Vaparator was added, Johnson said.

"We predict that in a new car we could double the mileage by taking the smog device off and replacing the standard carburetor with the Vapara-tor," he said. Johnson and Rose, a mechanical engineer, say they have "more or less" completed a feasibility model of the Vaparator and have set up a laboratory in a former machine shop here to further evaluate their data and begin work on a prototype. "What we want is something that can be placed on any model car, that is, you can tear off all the smog equipment and carburetor and replace it with the Vaparator," Johnson said.

"The idea is not new. The Vaparator will merely convert gasoline into vapor and it will burn as a vapor, thus having the advantages of a liquid petroleum gas system.

"There are some patents on gasoline vaporizers and atomizers which accomplish essentially the same effect; however, to our knowledge, none has proven practical or cost effective thus far.

"It comes out to be very competitive with the standard carburetor, cost wise. We predict it will cost somewhere around $150 for installation after everybody's made their markup."

He said their program calls for construction of a prototype as close as possible in design to the production prototype, test it with the Air Resources Board and then take it sto a major manufacturer. "Our best guess is that it will take six months to a year," Johnson said. He and Rose better be right because their leave of absence from the Navy is for one year and is without pay....

Dymally Vs. The Oil Industry

State Senator Mervyn M. Dymally wants to become Lt. Gov. Dymally. He is currently campaigning for the Democratic Party's nomination for that post, and part of his campaign is an attack upon the big oil companies.

It is amazing how politicians present themselves as qualified to advise the world about the operation of private business. This is especially amazing in Dymally's case. His biography lists nothing to cause us to suspect that he ever worked for a profit-seeking business, much less operated one. He is listed as the founder and "editor-inchief" of a publication known as the Black Politician. He is listed as a teacher and an author, but mostly as a political office holder.

We received a letter from the senator adivising us of a speech he was to make last Tuesday at Town Hall in Los Angeles, and sent us an advance copy of the speech.

In his cover letter he said "I think we both share a deep concern over the disturbing and increasing influence of the oil industry over our economic future and the future direction of the nation's energy planning."

The senator doesn't have that quite correct. We have deep concern about our economic future and the future direction of the nation's energy planning. But what disturbs us is not the influence of the oil companies, but the influence of politicians upon that economic future and upon the nation's energy planning.

"I realize," he wrote, "that editors do not have a lot of time to devote to reading speeches. However this one makes some new points and some that should provide grist for your editorial mills."

The senator didn't have that quite correct either. We took the time to read his speech. More than that, we took the time to check out some of his statements with service station dealers and with major oil companies.

He is correct in one aspect. It did provide grist for our editorial mill. As the reader well knows, politicians have provided us with "grist" for a great many years, more particularly so in the current petroleum issue.

We need not go through the entire speech with the reader. The essence of it is that the oil companies are bad guys, that political agencies should take over. He wants to force the oil companies out of the retail business because "service station operations are in a "state of virtual peonage to the oil barons."

That, of course, is designed to show himself as champion of the little businessman. His speech is generously sprinkled with jabs at the Nixon administration because that bears the Republican label and likewise at the Reagan Administration and at Evelle Younger. He wants to show he can kick private enterprise in the teeth more effectively than can Republicans. That's sort of like having a choice of being shot with a Winchester or a Remington.

To support his claim that station operators are peons of the "oil barons," Dymally's spech included these paragraphs:

"Dealers pay rent to the oil companies based on a minimum gallonagesay one and a half cents per gallon on a minimum of fifty thousand gallons per month. During the energy crisis, when the major oil companies did not provide their dealers with all the gasoline they could sell, they still required those dealers to pay rent on their minimum gallonage even though the majors could not deliver those minimums."

We checked with a couple of retailers and a couple of major oil companies, and the senator apparently doesn't have that quite correct either.

They pay only for what they receive. If the senator had some business experience, he might understand that contracts are generally honored between buyer and seller. It isn't like politics, wherein promises made by office seekers are not kept by office holders. But he goes on:

"The major companies also force their dealers to buy tires, batteries and other accessories at ridiculously inflated prices. For example the wholesale price that dealers at some Standard stations in California must pay for tires is two dollars more than the retail price for the same tire at (a discount store). And dealers are being forced to buy hundreds of thousands of these overpriced products every year just to maintain their leases."

Since he picked on Standard, we asked a Standard station operator and a retail manager of Standard of California about that. It seems the senator once more is not correct. Both retailer and supplier agree that the prices are the most competitive possible, and that no force is applied. In fact, according to the Standard retail manager, a Federal Trade Commission ruling specifically prohibits such arrangements. There is one requirement however. Standard stations are required to sell Standard gasoline exclusively. Imagine

Finally Dymally's speech included this shocker:

"A dealer who operated a Union Oil Station for many years suffered a heart attack and was forced to severely restrict his activities. His wife and children filled in and kept the station going. A few years later, he suffered another heart attack and died. Within six hours of his death, a Union Oil representative showed up at the hospital and demanded that the widow sign a quitclaim on the station. Union sold the station's stocks of accessories at ten cents on the dollar and bulldozed the station itself to the ground."

We called the senator's office to ask for specifics on that one. We wanted to know, who, when and where.

It seems that was supposed to have been revealed at a San Diego hearing of the Select Committee on Franchises the previous weekend-that's what Dymally's speech said.

On further checking, his office discovered it was not so revealed at San Diego, but it would be coming up at a later hearing in Los Angeles April 19 or 20. They would have to alter the senator's speech.

We can only concude that had we not questioned his statement, the audience at Los Angeles Town Hall would have . heard that inflammatory charge, and since we have not received an altered version of his speech, we must assume that all other newspapers which received advance copies are stuck with the original version.

And this man wants to be California's Lieutenant Governor.

Shifting The Milk Issue

Now Los Angeles County supervisors are yelling foul because the county milk commission, created to regulate the milk production industry, is fi-

The formation of the commission and Its financing was in accordance with nanced by Alta-Dena.

Supervisors say that "the impartiality of this commission is questioned" because the dairy pays for the commissioners' meeting room, meals, conventions and other junkets.

Sounds familar, doesn't it? However, usually the government officials are arguing that their appointed and tax financed commissions are beyond such favoritism, even though, they receive salaries, expense monies, meals and junkets.

Had the milk commission upheld the edict of the Los Angeles County Health Department director against Alta-Dena we wonder if the supervisors would have cried.

It all depends on whose ox is being

In the meantime, we suppose the hope of Los Angeles politicos is that the substantive issue will be lost in the wrangling. The essential matter is whether you can drink natural milk if you happen to want to. To this they say "no." If they are that absurd at the outset, we can see why they would wish to change the subject.

Sensing The News

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN Executive Vice President

United States Industrial Council

When U.S. Sen. "Scoop" Jackson recently demanded a rollback of crude oil prices, it occurred to me that the public might well vote for a roll back of congressional salaries in the case of legislators who make a career of grandstanding.

Sen. Jackson, for example, has been grandstanding for months on the oil situation. It apparently doesn't occur to him to ask the basic question: How much does it cost to find a barrel of new oil? He is all for slashing prices without investigating costs.

But Sen. Jackson is not the only offender. The silly season in Congress seems to last year-around. Much silliness has been voiced regarding proposals that the President resign. These proposals show a shocking ignorance of the U.S. constitutional system.

The liberals who call for the President's resignation say that he has "lost the confidence" of the American peo-

Be that as it may, a loss of confidence isn't sufficient cause for a presidential resignation. One cannot help wonder how George Washington would have fared in a poll after Valley Forge or Abraham Lincoln following the disaster at Bull Run.

Rule by Rating.

Those liberals who hammer at the "loss of confidence" theme in effect proposed government by Nielson rating. If that is what they want, they owe it to the public to propose a constitutional amendment to the effect that the President may be impeached for "treason, bribery, or a precipitous decline in the public opinion polls." But that isn't the law of the land at this time.

Those liberals who push this theory may find themselves the victims of their own line. A recent Harris Poll indicated that the American people have less confidence in Congress than they do in the President. Would the proponents of the "loss of confidence" theory want the 93rd Congress to resign en masse to restore public trust in the Legislative Branch? I think not.

From time to time, we hear talk about the British parliamentary system and how Mr. Nixon would not have survived under that system. But few commentators point out that every members of Parliament stands for election at the same time as the Prime Minister. If a British-style election were held today, Mr. Nixon might lose. But many proponents of welfarism, credits for the Soviet Union, rationing, renewed diplomatic ties with Castro's Cuba, and high spenders also might be turned out of office.

Disaster Lobby

As a practical matter, Americans aren't about to adopt the British Parliamentary System or government by Nielson rating. But the political sniping undoubtedly will continue. The country can stand a great dealing of political sniping, but congressional nonsense on economic issues is something else.

The same crowd that is talking presidential "resignation" also is pushing hard for rationing, nationalization of private business and other disastrous economic actions. These economic snipers in Congress could shoot down our free economy. They already are responsible for many of the shortages the nation faces. They don't understand, as John Currey pointed out recently in The Oklahoma, that "nearly 31 per cent of all firms doing less than $50 million a year in business—and nearly 46 per cent of larger firms-have reduced output of goods or services in the past year alone because of controls." Yet the liberals in Congress want more controls! Truly, the congressional liberals represent a disaster lobby.

'Uncle Soft Touch'

By ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON-The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is just about set to report out that House-rejected $1.5 billion "refresher" for the International Development Association (IDA)the "easy money" branch of the World

Spearheading this backstage drive are committee chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., and Sen. Jacob Javits, N.Y., ranking Republican.

Aim of the bipartisan backers of the huge new IDA handout is to ram it through the Senate in the hope that will induce the House to reverse its decisive rejection last December—248 to

Outlook for this strategy is conjectural-both in the Senate and the

In the past several years the Senate has been increasingly hostile to approving large-scale foreign spending. Significantly, although the White House and State Department are exerting heavy pressure for the IDA proposal, Senators generally, except for avowed internationalists, are noticeably silent and wary.

Obviously, they are waiting to see what the situation is both domestically and abroad when the explosive legislation comes up for a vote—later this Chances of persuading the House to reverse itself are even more dubious.

Not only was the vote against the $1.5 billion IDA "refresher" markedly bipartisan, but so was the stormy debate over it. Republicans were scathing in their opposition—despite the administration's vigorous lobbying and the public support of Secretary of State Kissinger and Treasury Secretary Schultz.

Republican and Democratic Congressmen outdid themselves in blasting the measure. WHAT DID IT

Graphic examples of this mauling bipartisan assault: Rep. H. Gross, Iowa, ranking Republican member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, flatly charged, "IDA loans are not loans; they are disguised gifts. The terms are so soft they will never be repaid. I ask supporters of this measure whether American taxpayers seeking to buy homes or to finance a business can borrow money on the 'no interest' terms of giveaway IDA loans to foreigners."

Rep. Wayne Hays, Ohio, a ranking Democratic committeeman, was equally blistering, asserting IDA loans will be used by the "developing countries" to pay the Arabs' exorbitant oil prices. He also noted caustically that none of the oil-rich Arab nations are "contributing a penny to IDA."

Unquestionably greatly impressing the House was the fact that not one IDA supporter said a word in rebuttal of Hay's searing blockbuster.

Unexpectedly, the coup de grace was administered by a long-time backer of foreign aid-Rep. George Mahon, D-Tex., veteran chairman of the Appropriations Committee and one of the most respected and influential leaders of the House.

Quietly but firmly the tall, dapper Texan served notice he would "strongly oppose the appropriation of funds for this legislation." Reinforcing that, Mahon pointed out that the U.S. share of IDA funds is far greater than that of other countries, and he should no longer agree to that-particularly in view of the billions being reaped by the non-contributing Arab nations.

WHAT IT'S FOR

The $1.5 billion for IDA is one-third of a $4.5 billion "replenishment" for the so-called "Soft-loan window" of the World Bank.

This multibillion dollar "replenishment" and the U.S.'s share were decided at a World Bank Conference in Nairobi, Kenya, last September. Playing a leading role at this meeting was former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara, head of the World Bank and a militant internationalist.

The U.S. allotment is three times as large as that of the other principal contributors-Germany, Japan and Britain. The $4.5 billion is the fourth IDA

"replenishment." It is to be provided mainly by 16 of the "richer" members of the World Bank over a threeyear period. So far, nothing has been forthcoming from any of them. If and when they will put up their $3 billion share remains to be seen. Since establishment of IDA in 1960, the U.S. has contributed in excess of $4 billion-approximately 40 per cent of the funds. In 1972, Congress, after a torrid fight, voted a third "replenishment" of $960 million.

That was done shortly after Congress raised the national debt ceiling of $50 billion-for the then-total of $465 bil-

Biggest single IDA beneficiary is India, which got 30 per cent of the IDA grants last year. India, while loftily professing to be a neutralist, is now in effect a Soviet satellite—and for years has been carpingly critical of and hostile to the U.S.

Last month, the State Department quietly wrote off $2.2 million of a $3.3 billion debt India has owed the U.S. for more than ten years.

This unpublicized huge giveaway evoked vehement bipartisan congressional denunciation, and resulted in legislation to block a repetition. Sponsors of this crackdown measure are Reps. Lester Wolff, D-N.Y., Edward Derwinski, R.-Ill., and William Broomfield, R-Mich.

Other leading IDA beneficiaries are black African members of the Organization of African Unity. (OAU). Every one of these countries has received many millions in economic aid from the U.S.—in addition to millions in IDA

"easy money" loans. Yet last year, at a so-called Eighth Extraordinary Session, the OAU Council of Ministers unanimously adopted a series of resolutions scathingly castigating the U.S. as "imperialistic," "racist," etc. Also shortly before and after last October's Arab-Israeli conflict, all the black OAU countries severed diplomatic relations with Israel -at the behest of the Arabs-and threatened to do so with the U.S.

DIFFERENT SPIELS

Both Democratic Sen. Fulbright and Republican Sen. Javits, spearheading the backstage drive for the $1.5 billion IDA "refresher," are up for election this year.

Their campaigning styles differ wide-

In Washington, Fulbright, is the imperious chairman of the prestigious Foreign Relations Committee, favors suede shoes and the company of diplomats and top-ranking notables. On the Arkansas hustings, he carefully presents a very different spectacle.

Attired in a checked shirt and no tie, baggy trousers and scuffed shoes, he is "good old Bill," who never mentions foreign affairs or his pronounced internationalist bent. Instead, Fulbright concentrates strictly on local problems and concerns, such as the price of soybeans, cotton, cattle and so forth.

From his "plain folks" ramblings, one would never know that Fulbright is leading the State Department's vigorous campaign to tap U.S. taxpayers for another $1.5 billion for IDA "easy money" loans.

In New York, Javits, on the other hand, stresses his prominent role in this effort. He loudly publicizes it and that he is a ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee and a fervent internationalist. He dresses smartly, and bears down strongly that he is a U.S. Senator.

Definitely, Javits is not "good old Jack" on the New York hustings. He is Senator Javits and wants all the voters to know it,

BY TOM ROSE

In a recent column I told that a young police officer in Dallas had been killed by a parolee. I asked if America's mushrooming crime problem might not be the result of not following the Biblical pattern of dealing with legal offenders. That column brought this eloquent reply from a police officer in Colorado Springs, Colorado:

"I picked up the Gazette-Telegraph newspaper today and happened to come across your column entitled "Products of System." It was interesting to read someone else's opinions on crime and criminals, and I thought perhaps you might be interested in how a cop feels about the system. You've probably heard from many ' police officers on this article, and I'm sure that all the letters would sound alike: Frustration, frustration, frustration!

"I've been a policeman for four years now, and it has been a constant frustration since I started in this department. We gripe amongst ourselves and occasionally to those who have it in their power to make change. The standard answer seems to be that if the job and the system are not liked. why not quit and seek other employment? I sincerely hope that this is not your answer. I, for one, don't want to quit, and I hope someday I will see a return to law and order.

"When I first became a cop I really didn't understand the system and hadn't made any significant arrests. Naturally there is excitement to the job and making felony arrests is exciting. But in my four years I've only had the opportunity to testify against my arrest twice. These two times were in district court, which reportedly is over-worked and undermanned (unprintable exclamation!). I've made hundreds of felony arrests and only testified twice! How the they be over-worked? I've seen judges call five-minute recesses that lasted 30 minutes; I've seen judges come in the building at 9 a.m. get court started at 10, and adjourn for lunch at 11:45 until 2 p.m.

"Recently we were the captive audience of a staff of do-gooders from the Adult Forensic Services. They had the nerve to tell us that of all the felony cases turned over to them for consideration, 90 per cent were recommended for probation, and that the judges agree on 75 per cent. The are right back on the street, and we'll never get the streets cleaned up at this rate. It's no wonder that new cops soon lose their spirit and develop that whipped look. We are whipped, at least until someone does something!

"I've talked to civic groups, and apparently I get carried away telling them about the job and that something must be done, or we are through. They get excited for the moment and pledge to do something, and I've yet to see any pressure put on the system. I don't blame the judges; they are only the representatives of a care-less society and the do-gooders who claim to represent society. I'm convinced that the silent majority is not at all content with the system, but organization is needed to make the change.

"Let us consider the victim of the crime a little more, and the criminal a little less. My heart goes out to the father of the young girl who is raped and beaten, and who then has to stand by and see the girl's assailant go free on a plea of guilty to simple assault (a misdemeanor). The assailant has a record of previous arrests for the same crime. My heart goes out to the parents of children who are victims of sex crimes. My heart goes out to the hard working citizen who is over-worked and over-taxed, only to be ripped off of his TV which still has to be paid for.

"All the new programs introduced each year to curb the rising crime rate only costs us more and more, and yet nothing has stopped it.

"I arrest a crook, and he all but laughs in my face because he knows his chances of a prison term are nil! Within hours he will be back on the street, and he doesn't give a about the straight citizen. I can recall hundreds of instances when one dirtbag has been arrested several times for the same crime before his original arrest ever came up to court. Then what happens? The DA's office drops all the counts except one if he'll plead guilty. Then he's given probation. , when will we get smart? We shouldn't have to bargain with the criminal; we should threaten with punishment on all charges.

"Mr. Rose, I could sit here and type for hours, only to end up very upset and frustrated. I've never written to anyone in regard to this, because we can get into trouble for rocking the boat, but I have the same rights as any citizen; and, I'm going to get this off my chest. I hope I didn't bore you with this letter. My typing alone should make it worthwhile reading. Thanks for being on our side!"

(Note: I have withheld the officer's name to protect his position on the local police force.)

Dear Readers, I believe you will agree that this eloquent letter from a dedicated police officer is anything but boring! We can't have a peaceful and prosperous land unless law and order start at home. Do not both the Old and New Testaments provide adequate guidelines for responsible selfrule at the local level? We suggest you start searching.

The hot air emanating from Washington decrying "profits" could heat America's homes for a generation. Profits on oil are 2 cents a gallon—taxes, 7 cents to 12 cents a gallon. Profits pay politicians over-priced salaries. Profits fuel America's industries, provide wages, jobs and markets that have made America the wonder and envy of Vote-hungry politicians, who couldn't run the corner grocery, wage war on American industry that has brought "profits" to millions of shareholders and more goods and services than any in history. Child Safety

Fountain Valley Board of Trustees, seeking unification of the district in next November's election, voted three to two against the safety of many children in attendance at the Plavan board meeting of March 21.

The vote followed a presentation by the Parents Organization of the Westmont Seven Tract. It consisted of statistics and well researched facts on why Westmont Seven children should not be forced to walk along and cross Plavan.

The Westmont presentation differed from that of parents from other tracts built in the vicinity of Plavan and once considered by the board for transfer, in that it took into consideration the safety factor for all children from all tracts. Several parents from the Parkside Tract, located across Warner Street from Plavan, gave convenience rather than safety as their reason for wanting to stay at Plavan. One man's response was the dubious simile of comparing and reducing children to food products. It intended to show that, to be marketable, products need change, and (somehow) so do children -those from Westmont 7, of course! He made a tasteless allusion to parents who had picketed the school on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, to ask the board to consider the safety of children first when making the change in boundary lines. Mrs. Sheila Meyers, board president, smiled benevolently upon hearing his remarks.

To the board members' half-hearted questions about safety, the district administrators answered with elusive. half-truths.

The year-round calendar now in force at Plavan was not the issue. However, in her speech preceding her vote in favor of the Westmont 7 children, Mrs. Ackley, the newly elected board member, remarked that the quality of the educational programs at Playan and Nieblas had not been taken into consideration by any of the parents. I want to take exception to such a statement, pointing out that regardless of how good or how poor a program is, it is only as good as the classroom teacher who enforces it and as the interest parents have in their children's school work. My husband and I are very concerned about our children's education. Personally, I feel that they will get educated in spite and not because of the implementation of programs essentially designed to perpetrate (and perpetuate) the district administration's public relations work.

I want to stress that the board of trustees favored the money factor over the safety of our children. This same board often asks for bids to install sprinklers on school lawns and has just approved spending $10,000 through the Hotline Funds for equipment the PTO Board could have raised funds to provide, yet refuses to allocate $2,500 from its 1974-75 budget to provide transportation for the safety of children.

And this board is now seeking to extend its monopoly over our children from a period of 8 years to one of 12 years by unifying the elementary and high schools in five elementary district boundary lines.

> Mrs. Robert Barany Fountain Valley,

America Leads

I am so happy for these "free as the birds" students who call themselves "streakers." Our college and university administrators should be very proud of such outstanding accomplishments.

Just think another "first" for our country! If the people of Sodom and Gomorrah would still be in existence, they would bow their heads in shame for not having thought of this exciting entertainment first.

And we tax payers should be so thankful that finally we are getting something worthwhile for our tax dollar! Instead of violent demonstrations, defying authority, and killings, the students have evolved to this pleasant and en-lightened form of expressing their love for each other, the administrators and even the poor tax payers. We ought to really do something for them to show our appreciation.

We should write our legislators to complete the conversion of our schools of higher learning to love temples. football field and stadiums to gardens and groves for these love-bug streakers. They could then have their own priests and priestesses who would conduct worship services to the god of the flesh, the male ego on a pedestal, just like Pompei before Mt. Versuvius erupted. They wouldn't have time for any anti-establishment demonstrations or studies.

We should not deny our children things we didn't have because we were too dumb to demand these things from our government. Kids today know better, they just ask (demand) and the government will give it to them. They have started something and the rest of the world will soon follow. "America leads, we follow." The ones that started this streaking should be given gold medals, their names and torsos emplazoned on billboards across the country, especially on our freeways, that would slow the drivers down to 55 m.p.h.

Adolph Neumann Placentia

On a recent Friday evening, our daughter and several neighborhood youngsters were dropped off at the high school where a basketball game was to be played. Afterwards, while waiting at the designated rendezvous for my husband to pick them up, they saw three young streakers flash by, followed by three motorcycle police.

Being of the generation that grew up hearing the warnings about men who hung around school grounds and parks and dared to unzip their trousers in front of young girls, (these characters were considered "sick" and when apprehended were charged with "indecent exposure"), I was annoyed that our youngters had been subject to viewing such nudity.

However, the children thought nothing of it, considering it just a daring prank. But their eves flased in unconcealed anger and they were very vociferous in their account of the uncalled for brutality of the arresting officers since the young streakers did not resist arrest, but seemed to be intimidated by the authority vested in the officers without the need for a show of force.

It is difficult—in fact, impossible—to teach our young people respect for law and law enforcement officers when they see unnecessary brutality being used against their peers.

If law enforcement officers desire the populace to "support your local police" they will have to first earn our respect. Our young people are a very impressionable part of the populace! Pauline E. Moen

Huntington Beach

California drivers who ignore the speed limit of 55 mph are doing more than breaking the law. They are showing no respect for the law and setting themselves above the law.

Besides, the disrespect for the laws, these drivers who exceed the 55 mph speed limit are wasting needed gasoline. Each such driver is more than a law breaker. I see that person as a threat to law hecause the person is saying, "Laws are for other people to obey, but they are not for me."

I believe all drivers should not rely just upon the law enforcement agencies to enforce the 55 mph speed limit. Surely there are enough drivers who don't put themselves above the law, and they can set a pattern of slowing down for those who do not.

Panama Canal

Regarding your article by Wm. Giandoni, Copley News Service. (March 24 Register) It seems important to keep the USA from giving away the Panama Canal. Here are some facts not generally known that I have dug out at the library.

The Canal Zone never belonged to Panama at all. We, or rather President Theodore Roosevelt, took it by force of arms from Colombia in November 1903. Later in 1921 we paid Colombia by way of a treaty $25,000,000 for the Canal Zone. This treaty recognized the independence of Panama. Below are the details.

Jan. 22, 1903. Theodore Roosevelt made a treaty which was ratified by our Senate to take over the French company's concession to dig a canal across the isthmus in what was then Colombia. We paid the French company $40,000,000 for their concession. We agreed to pay Colombia $10,000,000 plus $250,000 per year. The President of Colombia agreed to this treaty but the Colombian Senate would not agree. They wanted the French company to pay to transfer the concession. Which they would not do. Action stopped.

President T. Roosevelt felt that it was important to get the canal started. So he hired one of the French company engineers. Some think it was the French company. But history says that Mr. Phillipe Bunau-Varilla, one of the engineers of the French company, on Nov. 4, 1903, declared Panama an independent country. Two days before on Nov. 2, 1903, the USS (warship) Nashville arrived at Colon on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus.

The Colombian Navy appeared to put down the independence movement. The commander of the Nashville told them to go away before they got hurt. They went home to Colombia.

Then after two more days on Nov. 6, 1903, the USA recognized the government of Panama. Mr. Phillipe Bunau-Varilla then appointed himself to be minister to the United States and went to Washington and executed the treaty between the USA and Panama on Nov. 18, 1903. This treaty gave the USA perpetual rights to the Panama Canal Zone. We gave Panama $10,000,000 to set up their government and $250,000 a year to keep them going. There were some other items such as we could take more land if needed. Mr. Phillipe Bunau-Varilla then disappeared.

On Dec. 23, 1903, Colombia protested to the USA for taking the Panama area from them. President Theodore Roosevelt is reported to have said that he took the Canal Zone to stop all the talk and get the work started. By April 1921 our conscience had bothered us enough so that we in a treaty form offered Colombia $25,000,000 for the Canal Zone and recognition of Panama which they accepted.

Speak Truth

Recently I heard a voter say, "What this country needs is more good people and not so many smart ones." Truth and integrity are beginning to re-surface in places where they seemed almost lost forever.

In school as well as in our home we were taught to live by the "honest rule," not only the Golden Rule. We were told to "Say what you mean, and mean what you say." Also to talk with some sense, and leave nonsense to those who don't know any better. It has been said that the average politician is just about as average as anyone. Some politicians want to blame society or the public for a "mood of complacency" or apathy when often the politicians themselves are to blame for not getting more

When we first began to hear of some questionable things slowly coming to light in Washington, D.C., I got discouraged with the bits of news and the uncertain reports which might or might not be true. Many Americans save a love for truth and a hatred for lies. I am one of them, and I decided to

I remember clearly my prayer that afternoon: We, the American people, what was going on in our capitol, and were not being told the truth about that if it were God's will, please let us know the true conditions in our federal government. And to open the door

Later when the Watergate hearings were televised I felt I should look and listen whenever I could. There is a maxim: "Be sure your sins will find you out." Deceit and lies do not provide a good foundation when things begin to crumble. No amount of whitewash will cover up when God decides it is time to take the lid off.

What does a person do when he sees his mistake? Or what should he do? Take the direct approach, and with humility say, "I was wong, I am sorry, God forgive me."

Kissinger Goal

Sometime ago Human Events reported: "State Department auditors were frankly flabbergasted by the bill turned in by Secretary of State Kissinger for a party thrown at New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art. Food for the assorted diplomats came to more than $24,000. Flower arrangements alone totaled nearly $8,000." Later, a Register columnist listed some of the choice delicacies served at the party and added that Kissinger neither ate nor drank there, but instead left with his "beauteous companion" to dine elsewhere.

Why was this extravagant party, paid for by the suffering taxpayers, allowed? Because Kissinger controls Nixon instead of vice versa? The answer may be found in analyzing Kissinger's role, from an early age, in the federal government as an employe of the Rockefeller family. A member of the Rockefeller-controlled, secret oneworld Council on Foreign Relations, which organization apparently controls federal policies, the German-born Kissinger wields great power accorded him by CFR's director, Nelson Rockefeller.

Shortly after the party, Rep. Jonathan Bingham (D.-N.Y.) proposed the Constitution be amended to allow a foreign-born man to become President. That he had Kissinger in mind as a future President can be suspected in view of Bingham's own political history. An active official in both Roosevelt and Truman Administrations, he subsequently became a representative in the United Nations. As a congressman since 1965, he has consistently defended the UN. Also, he is a member of CFR and the Americans for Democratic Action, the latter the American version of the British Fabian Socialist Society. For information as to the one-world role of the UN read G. Edward Griffin's "The Fearful Master," for sale at all American Opinion bookstores.

The picture becomes clearer. The news media, especially those CFR-controlled, laud K i s s i n g e r 's so-called peace agreements with communist and pro-communist nations - agreements which seem to benefit communists instead of our nation.

If the aging Nelson Rockefeller again is thwarted in his presidential aspiration, could not Bingham's proposal and. Nelson's control, through his agent Kissinger, of federal policies be a subtle effort to prepare Kissinger for that high office? And isn't it quite possible that Henry aspires to even higher office, such as World Emperor if or when one-worldism is achieved? The "assorted diplomats" so richly feted had to be UN delegates who would be expected to elect the oneworld potentate. Is Kissinger already compaigning, at taxpayers' expense, for presidential office as a preliminary step to their ultimate goal?

Dime Donation

I recently received an envelope from the March of Dimes requesting a donation. It informed me that one of the items my money would combat was the deaths of 500,000 unborn babies from birth defects.

This statistic is chilling, but I could only wonder, how many of these unborn babies has March of Dimes money helped to destroy? Terrible claim? Read the following excerpt from a speech by Dr. Michael Kaback at a recent March of Dimes banquet. (He is a key figure in the area of genetic counseling in Southern California, an area which is the recipient of March of Dimes funds,) Speaking of amniocentesis (a test of uterine fluids which can determine several problems the baby may have), he stated: "...this capability provides a new basis of information for the family which can now be helped if the family can elect to abort the pregnancy."

In such cases, the babies are aborted late in the pregnancy as amniocentesis is not done before 15 or 18 weeks and often later. The child is, of course, completely formed and active, as it has been for some time. The saline solution used to abort the babies at this stage literally pickles them, scalding away the outer layer of skin. The mother goes into labor and the baby is delivered dead.

The babies most often aborted in this manner are Down's syndrome (mongoloid) babies. A mongoloid child can be personable, helpful, even have reasonable academic skills at a low level. He is, by nature, loving, gentle, and in even a mediocre situation, enjoys life. If the parent absolutely cannot bear his "imperfection," foster homes are available.

March of Dimes involvement in this morally repugnant, unjust procedure is a sad footnote to the good work they have done and are doing to help mankind. It is an embarrassment to the well-intentioned people who work with the organization to achieve other laudable ends.

against poverty and for liberty. Yet, on a comparative basis with the entire world California is free of starvation. We are not-yet-the victims of mass nians are "united" in that we are starvation. But violence will not solve the problems we do have; it will merely increase poverty.

The Symbionese Liberation Army members who brutally kidnaped Patricia Hearst and smashed Stephen Weed acted in error-a child's error-but done within an adult's context of fear, instead of a child's fear. When an adult initiates violence, then the innocent suffer and damage can mean death.

No decent man or woman of goodwill -despite wider philosophical differences-would ever want to threaten, abuse or manipulatively use another human being, especially as cannon fodder. Yet, that is precisely what the SLA kidnapers have done. They have used an innocent human being as cannon fodder.

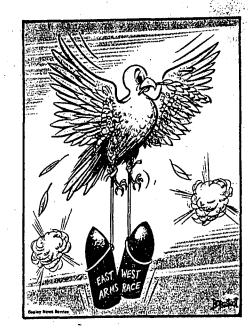

Those who received the "free" food must have felt that they, too, have been used as cannon fodder, real or imagined. If imagined, then perhaps the feeling sprang from the cesspool of social envy, that is, a desire to destroy for the sake of destruction, rather than to live for the sake of preserving a chance to climb, acquire, and enjoy one's honest fruits of productive ef-

Gestures of good faith are now upon all those who have received food. They should refuse to accept any future distribution of food through violence and terror. If they do, they will be sanctioning acts of brutality-and possible violence against their own children. The simple truth is that might never makes right. Never.

The kidnapers who are enslaving Patricia must realize that endless demands for food will not save hungry men, women and children. Brutal, violent demands will not build a civilized society. SLA members Remiro and Little have shown an act of civilization when they announced their refusal to exchange their release for Patricia, and are willing to stand trial upon the merits of the case.

The kidnapers have asked for gestures of good faith. Californians in myriad ways have demonstrated their good faith. It is time for the kidnapers to reciprocate. It is time for them to stop causing fear and anguish. It is time for them to release Patricia as a gesture of good faith toward solving poverty and, man liberty.

Meditation

I am writing in reply to Kershner's Commentary on Saturday, March 24. Apparently Mr. Kershner has not researched his topic and knows nothing about Transcendental Meditation. TM has nothing to do with the Hindu religion. It is simply a technique for relaxation. You learn to meditate by a simple process that doesn't have any religious overtones at all. You are still quite free to believe in any religion you choose. It is, of course, possible that some people might develop an interest in the Hindu religion, but the vast majority don't.

Hershner makes so many ridiculously false claims that I don't really know which to refute first. The most obvious one, besides the religious aspect, is that Kirshner gives the impression that a long-haired, bearded priest is going to come to your local elementary school and indoctrinate the kids. Ridiculous! Maharishi is simply the founder of the technique. He lectures around the world and trains some of the teachers. The teachers are "normal" people who have meditated, found it beneficial, and desire to share the technique with others.

Another of his errors is in saying that Kaye feels that "TM is rewarding and helpful." That statement makes the claim sound like hearsay when, in fact, the positive effects of TM have been proven in numerous scientific studies.

Finally, although I am not that familiar with the Science of Creative Intelligence, which is an advanced course of study for interested meditators, I don't recall it mentioning the Hindu religion either. I really think that Kershner must have gotten hold of one article with a picture of Maharishi in it, stereotyped him and TM, and didn't bother researching his claims.

Remodeling Chaos

By BERNARD SIEGAN

Adjunct Professor of Law University of San Diego Law School

If the substance is the same, changing the brand will not alter the effect. whether it involves cold remedies, cleaning agents - or zoning regulations. That, in essence, is the answer to most new schemes presently being proposed to solve the problems of zoning. They are fundamentally the same, except only for those seeking the end of zoning.

It appears many of seemingly good intentions are hotly in pursuit of that certain special zoning system that will remove the errors and evils of the existing one. Just about everyone with any knowledge of the subject will readily acknowledge that zoning has been largely a failure and something should be done. Still, despite the strong. and vehement attacks planners, lawyers and writers make, most reject. scrapping it, insisting instead upon some new variety of regulation. The schemes differ in name and form, but not in substance for the prime ingredient is government control.

Impact zoning, performance zoning, incentive zoning, zoning for quality, balanced community zoning, ecologically sensitive zoning, are some of the titles. And there are more. Under each, there would supposedly be better and sounder planning, more and better housing, more open space and environmental protection, etc., etc., all basically a repetition of representations made in the past in support of zoning, and with the same probability of suc-

What the new schemes ignore is that the existence of government controls largely accounts for the problems. The same group of planners and politicians that have so dismally performed in the past are scarcely entitled to a repeat performance: Failure should not be rewarded. Politics and political expediency would remain the controlling factors and that spells no change whatsoever.

The terms and intent of a law are not really as important as how it is applied—and often intention and application differ radically. When a certain zoning law clearly states one thing and 50 screaming constituents insist it should be interpreted or applied differently, the politicians who must decide are certainly placed in a ence, I submit that many if not most politicians will do what is in their own best interest, and if that is contrary to the law, so be it. I do not doubt that many would vote the earth is flat if that were politically expedient. Yes, Virginia, Watergate is neither the first nor last time politicians and office holders will engage in moral or legal corruption.

The only meaningful change is to eliminate zoning and rely on the effective and efficient forces of the market place to control the use and development of land and property. There will be difficulties and inequities, but much less so than presently exist and many can be met with a limited number of specific laws directed at specific problems such as, for example, a parking ordinance. The example of non-zoned Houston is available for all to observe and study the results of a different and remarkably successful approach to the regulation of land use.

This is also a particularly timely moment to look at the difference of a regulated versus a non-regulated market. President Nixon imposed wageprice controls in August 1971 in response to a virtual groundswell of opinion demanding that action.

Today, less than three years later. whatever goundswell there exists is for a reverse course.

The follies of zoning are much less dramatic; they do not make the nightly TV news and are not experienced daily at the supermart. But they are well documented in the literature, even by those favorable to the concept. Within recent years, almost every major law journal in the country has published an article highly critical of zoning practices, some, such as those appearing in the Harvard and Yale journals, contending that all or most of zoning is unconstitutional.

It is difficult to find a stronger indictment than the report made in 1968 by the professional organization of planners, the American Society of Planning Officials (ASPO), to the Presidential Commission on Urban Problems. Conclusions reached in turn by that commission as well as those of two other Presidential and several state commissions were equally devastating to zoning practices.

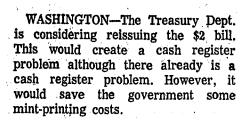

Only the termination of zoning will remove these problems.

An Illusion Vanishes

TEL AVIV, Israel-Yesterday I visited the Tel Hashomer Rehabilitation Hospital near Tel Aviv. Knowing that its inmates were soldiers crippled in the Yom Kippur War, my assumption was that I would encounter men made wretched by the loss of arms and legs or both.

What I found were young men in wheelchairs racing in the corridors, joking with each other and the nurses, seemingly utterly unconcerned with their grim future. As I came close enough to listen to their conversations I heard little that could be identified with my thoughts of their unhappiness.

The young men spoke of their future lives, planning jobs, training, purchase of automobiles (subsidized by government grants and interest-free loans). As if nothing abnormal or sad had happened to their young lives—they seemed content, but their mothers, wives and girlfriends were not, although they valiantly tried to hide their grief under a smile.

The theme of normalcy was carried through, even at the hospital entrance where a badly dented fender formed the base of a handwritten announce-

> INVALIDS! KATZ's BODYSHOP IN PETACH TIKVA IS WAITING FOR YOU!

This display of courage and Israeli stiff-upper lip is only skin-deep. Underneath it all there is a great deal of insecurity and malcontent with the state of affairs in Israel.

The war, its course and outcome, has changed Israel's people as well as their outlook. The feeling of invincibility on the battlefield has been replaced by a sober recognition of "having survived". With it comes a rather universal dissatisfaction with the Government—a feeling of having been let down by yesterday's heroes such as Golda Meir and Defense Minister Moshe Dayan,

I was told by many well-informed Israelis that "had it not been for the Geneva meetings with the Arabs, the current Government would never have survived the recent elections."

It was spelled out to me further by several political old-timers: "If Menachem Beigin (the head of the newly formed center-to-right coalition party 'Likud') had not been the alternative, Likud would have won the elections." Israel was not willing to change political attitudes so drastically that an expansionist-seeking to establish the ancient biblical frontiers of Israelwould be allowed to risk another war (or another round of the Yom Kippur

The days of Ben Gurion are remembered with nostalgia and comparisons invariably turn out to be less than flattering to the "Old Lady" as some call Golda Meir rather pointedly.

The instability is aggravated by the 3000 bereaved families of men killed or missing in the Yom Kippur War. Their number is close to 15,000 and, if the families and friends of the soldiers crippled for life are added, one can count a substantial percentage of Israelis forming a nucleus of discontentment. As Israel's population is approximately an eightieth part that of the U.S. this would be equivalent to about 2 million directly aggrieved Americans being actively anti-government.

Another attitude has drastically changed: In the 1967 Six-day War Israel fought with the perspective of the holocaust in mind. The spectre of the Hitler era with an indifferent world and the destroying of 6 million Jews gave the Israelis an incentive of the need for survival.

In the Yom Kippur War of 1973 Israel had the perspective of the immense victory won in 1967. There was a feeling that an era of peace had come at last to this persecuted people. A peace bought and maintained by the superior skill of the Israel Defense Forces. Coupled with a detectable measure of arrogance it made Israel reckless, hence vulnerable. In part the outcome of the Yom Kippur War is its

Now again Israel seems to assume the holocaust attitude. This is reinforced by "feeling totally let down by an uncaring world of which one half was more concerned with their own relationships with the oil-rich Arabs, and the other half actually in conspiracy with the Arabs for their own sinister purposes.

All of this gives the Israelis the uneasy feeling that they had lived in a fool's paradise for the years separating the Yom Kippur War from the Six-day War. While all of Israel knows their people's army won an amazing victory over the Arabs there are few illusions about enjoying the spoils this

There must be peace for the warweary people whose young people, if under the age of 26, have never experienced the blessings of a single day of tranquility and personal security.

Holifield Winks At 1313

By JO HINDMAN

A petition from the country-at-large is stalled in two subcommittees of Congress. Prepared by Statewide Committees Opposing Regional Plan Areas (SCORPA), one of its major grievances is regional governance.

The House Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations under Rep. L.H. Fountain is silent, as this is written. Answering in his stead, Rep. Chet Holifield of the parent House Government Operations Committee wrote Mch. 13, "I do not believe any of the allegations contained in the petition and therefore I will not present your (SCORPA) petition to the House."

The Senate Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations also replied; Chairman Sen. E.S. Muskie wrote 3-5-74: "I have had the opportunity to review this petition and have concluded that the charges contained in it are fundamentally groundless and unsupported by fact."

Brushing aside dictatorial utterances of the sort, one way to determine whether the petition charges are true or false is for Congress to set hearing dates for citizens to be heard publicly. The suggested hearing committee should be a joint body, impaneled by members from House and Senate. It certainly should be a traveling committee—north, south, east, west—for the convenience of citizens who wish to speak out but who cannot afford the trip to Wash. D.C. to do so. SCORPA should be consulted on dates and places so that ample notice can be provided for all citizens to have their say about regional unlimited governance, a life and death issue facing this nation today. The petition reaffirms limited government as its lodestar. A major grievance charges that rule by men through shifty regulations of administrative procedure have supplanted rule by law. Instances abound. Such as the attack on American business by the Occupational Safety and Health apparatus (OSHA), also the iron grip of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) exposed in the tussock moth-D.D.T. controversy.

The petition identifies the interlocking directorate of organizations led by radical political science professors and composed of certain state governors, city, county and regional officials in the National Governors Conference (NGC), Council of State Governments (CSG), U.S. Conference of Mayors (USCM), National League of Cities (NLC), and National Assn. of Counties (NACo). Those groups operate inside federal government as the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR). They link to other shirttail reform groups suckered to all levels of government, another example being the National Municipal League which produced the "granddaddy" regional planning land use sample law.

The whole cabal is self-designated as Thirteen-Thirteen, a political syndicate partially headquartered at 1313 E. 60th St., Chicago; Lexington (Ky), Wash., D.C. and New York, endowed by the Rockefeller family, sustained by Ford and Carnegie tax exempt funds, operated by a proliferation of agencies, Brookings Institution being still another, most of them exempted from bearing the burden of taxation.

The 1313 political syndicate is tearing down our constitutional republic, supplanting it with a regional dictatorship manipulated by 1313 and its powerful accomplices.

Why does the petition pinpoint ACIR? Simply because that federal Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations offers the only present door leading into the whole 1313 mess inside federal government. Once inside, an honest Congress could overturn the tables of the law changers.

Will Congress do it?

The Constitution of Liberty There can be little doubt that man owes some of his greatest successes in the past to the fact that he has not been able to control social life. His continued advance may well depend on his deliberately refraining from exercising controls which are now in his

AN EDITOR'S OUTLOOK

Stealing The Revolution

By JENKIN LLOYD JONES

A major effort to turn America's approaching bicentennial into a handhold for a leftist revolution is now under way, and it represents a subtle revolutionary strategy.

Instead of damning the American tradition, the claim will now be made that it has been betraved, and that only the New Left can restore the principles of the founding fathers.

The vehicle for this new tactic is an outfit called The People's Bicentennial Commission, located at 1346 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D.C. 20036, and for $7 it will send you a full packet of literature including one publication bearing the great seal of the United States.

What has apparently happened is a realization that shouting for Lenin, peddling the thoughts of Mao and burning American flags didn't sell. But let's let a People's Bicentennial writer tell it in his own words:

"We need a plan of attack, a program for taking power....It has to come out of our own life experience and not out of the experiences of Russia or China or Cuba...New realities arise and old theories become irrelevant. New methods become necessary. If we expect to be listened to, we have to take a fresh look and build our own plan, abandoning all the old sacred texts on what is to be done."

The "fresh look" is appealing indeed. One pamphlet is called "The Tree of Liberty." another "The Light in the Steeple," and others go under the name of Tom Paine's "Common Sense." They are replete with Revolutionary War-era woodcuts and copious quotes from the leaders of that time. There's a "committee of correspondence" and a recognition pin-"Don't tread on me." And the listing of America's great heroes slides easily from Sam Adams, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin to Bobby Seale, Huey Newton and the Black Panthers.

There are, of course, some carryovers from the old New Left program. The traditional value system remains under attack, as witness: "A great many middle-class children and young adults have begun to reject the structure and authority of the family units, as well as the role and values of their parents in the economic process. A significant portion of the youth community has come to attack and ridicule the entire set of assumptions upon which the average American adult has rationalized and justified his own existence within the family and society, including the concept of material accumulation, the notion of postponed gratification, the work ethic, competition, filial gratitude for parental sacrifice and premarital chastity." Included in the packet is a "teacher's guide" showing how to explain that the "Tories," that is, free enterprisers, have seized and subverted the pure ideals of the American Revolution. Teachers are buttered up by describing them as victims of the "system." But there is also a high school students' guide, instructing them how to ride herd on teachers:

"If students feel that one teacher is particularly poor, misinterpreting facts, emphasizing the wrong points or using a racist or sexist textbook, by using the Bill of Student Rights, that one particular case can be linked up to the right calling for democracy in the classroom."

Guess what "democracy in the classroom" means.

Another pamphlet aimed at high schoolers says:

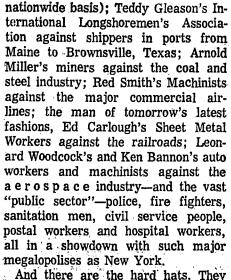

"Start a petition drive among people your own age called 'I never gave my consent,' asking for relief from laws that were made without your say-so." Since no high school students have made any laws, this provides the moral rationale to defy any that displease

On the college level, it is pointed out how leftist professors could be nurtured on university research grants, and how foundation funds could be used to pay "distinguished visiting lecturers and authorities" $1,000 to $3,000 per appearance. Students are urged to protest any participation by their school in programs sponsored by the official American Revolution Bicentennial Commission, and to insist on the substitution of People's Bicentennial observances.

It is announced that taped speeches by "new patriots," such as Rev. William Sloan Coffin, Dick Gregory, Reps. Ronald Dellums (D-Calif.) and Bella Abzug (D.-N.Y.), and ex-Sen. Fred Harris, are not only available but are currently being aired under the title "In the Public Interest" on a daily basis over 550 commercial, educational and college radio stations.

"The Second American Revolution." proclaims the People's Bicentennial Commission, "is a big task, but not as big as taking on George III." So there you have it—the program for observing America's 200th birthday. The "Internationale" will not be sung. The old hammer-and-sickle banners have been quietly put in the closet. Young America will be marched toward collectivism to the tune of Yankee Doodle and behind frantically waved Old Glory.

EV LARRY PETERSON Register Staff Writer A Newport Beach firm has unveiled a program it believes will reshape the Southern California, yacht, broker-

Jim Barone and Dale Wullner head Multi-List, Inc., which has released its first annual U.S. Marine Index. The list contains descriptions, specifications, special features, asking prices and pictures of hundreds of yachts for sale in various parts of the country.

Owners of yachts listed in the index, Barone said, have agreed to sell their boats only through member-subscribers of Multi-List.

Member subscribers will split standard 10 per cent sales commissions based on the amount of work done by each in completing each sale. The index will enable a broker in San Diego to participate and profit in the sale of a vice versa. 😘 🚟

Nearly all Southern California yacht sales have been made on an open-listing basis in the past. Anyone completing the sale received full commission, regardless of who initially listed the yacht.

In contrast, said Barone, 95 per cent of Southern California's real estate sales are made under exclusive individual or multiple-broker listings, the 5 per cent remainder. made under open listings.

Barone thinks the index and Multi-List will revive communication and speed the pace of yacht sales.

Multi-List applicants are screened for reputation before admission to membership, said Barone. Member-subscribers receive a monthly date on listings.

Since forming the Multi-List corporation just 18 months ago. Barone and Wullner have been experimenting with the index on a small scale: They listed 450 boats, sold 100 in that trial period.

Acting separately, the airlines said subsidies are needed to offset the tremendous increase in jet fuel prices, a cost wholly or partly subsidized by the governments of its international airline competition.

Pan Am asked for a $194 million subsidy for the next 12 months. At the same time it said it is making efforts to reduce the amount it will require. TWA estimated it would need around $100 mil-

SAN FRANCISCO ((BW) The money markets went through a week similar to last, with yields moving higher and spirits going lower, Crocker Bank reported Friday (April 5) in its Weekly Money Market Review.

Fed funds remained close to 10 per cent throughout the week without intervention from the Fed. This seemed to indicate there is no desire to ease pressure on banks.

With loan demand soaring beyond expected levels, banks were forced to move up their Certificate of Deposit rates, bringing commercial paper rates up with them, the bank noted.

Escalating money market rates pushed up the base lending rates of banks to 9% per cent, only days after a rise to 9½ per cent.

After last week's signs of an approaching stabilization point, bond markets fell sharply under the pressure of both the money market and big supply. Despite increasingly higher yields, underwritings were not successful, either in corporates or munici-

New car sales dropped 29 per cent in March from the same period in 1973.

Halo Photos May Furnish Health Clues

Size Of Emanations Found To Change As Emotions Vary

SAN JOSE (UPI) - A halolike image produced by an unusual method of photography could possibly be used to diagnose physical and mental disorders, says a San Jose photographer who has worked extensively with the I technique.

Richard Szumski, San Jose State University's director of photography for audio visual production services. said the method involves placing the subject directly on film and subjecting it to a high frequency electrical field. The subject actually takes its own picture by the light it gives off. Photos are produced in total darkness without the aid of a camera or a light source separate from the subject.

Working something like an x-ray machine, the process called Kirlian is named after its discoverers, Semyon D. Kirlian and his late wife, Valentina. Objects photographed with the Kirlian method have halos surrounding them, resembling the mystical auras around saints depicted in religious art.

Szumski said the Kirlians found that a person's halo begins fading as he approaches death, then slowly fades away to nothing after death.

The photographer said he got similar results when photographing leaves of his homegrown plants. He first photographed a normal, healthy leaf, and the halo surrounding the leaf was evident. He then photographed other leaves, and one had no halo at all. Soon afterwards, the plant which the leaf came from died.

While he said he is intrigued by the process and its implications, Szumski said he is not sure what to call the halos he has found around objects.

"There are many who dismiss them as being nothing more than a long known effect called corona, but this explanation may be as incomplete as saying music is due to a long known effect called sound," he said.

"At the same time, there are others who may be reading more into the photographs than can be justified at the present time by claiming that the pictures show the aura long said to exist by psychics."

Szumski also speculated the amount of halo surrounding an object may determine its growth possibilities. To prove his point, he referred to a photo

he made of two apricots. The smaller, less mature apricot in the photo had more of a halo than the older apricot, and the total halo area of the smaller apricot equaled the size of the fully-developed apricot. Pointing out another observation, Szumski said the halo around a person's finger changes size with emotional change.

He said some believe it may be possible to measure states of anxiety through Kirlian photography, which would be a major diagnostic advance in the treatment of emotional disor-

European Crew To Man Space Shuttle Flight

HOUSTON (UPI) - The first space shuttle mission with a 1980 blastoff date will carry the first non-Russian European astronauts as part of an international crew.

Heinz Stoewer, a European Space Agency and Spacelab project manager for the Europeans, said the mission could be the first launch in earth orbit carrying an international crew.

The Europeans will be trained at the Johnson Space Center for the Spacelab mission, a containerized cargo for the shuttle, carrying men and a scientific laboratory. It will be carried in the shuttle's cargo bay. Stoewer said 40 per cent of the shuttle missions will carry the re-useable Spacelabs for use up to 50 times. Spacelab is being developed by the European Space Research Organization, composed of Belgium, Denmark, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and West Germany.

Germany, according to Stoewer, will finance 50 per cent of the estimated $360 million cost. Spacelab will be funded, developed and controlled by the research organization. The United States is considering buying five of the

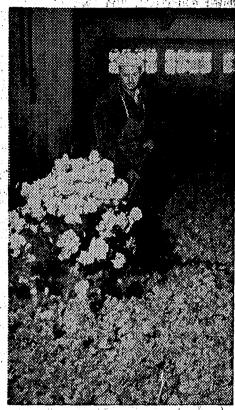

The European crews will pick up the operational costs of each mission they go on, Stoewer said.

The first operational flight of the space lab is planned for April, 1980, but Stoewer said six earlier test flights are scheduled.

University of Hawaii faculty members concerned with the energy crisis are convinced there is no other place that has such a variety and abundance of natural energy resources, all of which are potential nonpolluting power

Dr. John Shupe, dean of the university's engineering department, said "There is no better spot on earth than here" for the development, simultaneously, of solar, geothermal, oceanic and wind energy resources.

With this in mind, Shupe and his colleagues have proposed to the Hawaii Legislature and federal agencies the establishment of a Hawaii Natural Energy Institute which would focus on the state's unique combination of natural assets and how to turn them into nonpolluting power sources. Shupe said that technology should be directed to proceed as rapidly as possible through the fossil fuel and nuclear fission era into what he calls a renewable natural energy systems and nuclear fusion era.

"Although the current energy crisis has provided some impetus for the development of new energy systems," Shupe said "the major research and development effort is still directed toward greater utilization of fossil fuels and nuclear fission reactors.

"As new oil fields are identified and exploited, both on and off-shore; as coal liquification and gasification processes are developed; as improved methods for utilizing oil shale and tar sands are discovered; and as breeder reactors increase the power generating capacity of uranium, the incentive for developing new energy systems may quantities of fossils, fuels and uranium," Shupe said, "it would be impossible to fulfill the expanding global energy requirements with these resources alone without serious environmental degradation due to the negative effects of combustion byproducts, heat and long-lived radioactive wastes."

Shupe noted that "Hawaii, of all 50 states, is blessed with the greatest variety and abundance of natural energy resources-geothermal, solar radiation, ocean, thermal, wind and water

"Since Hawaii is in a good latitude for direct sunlight," Shupe said, "there are ways of possibly converting solar energy into a usable form." He cited photosynthesis and that alcohol formed in sugar cane production can be used as an additive to gas or as the basis of a total energy system.

Hawaii, the first state to earmark money for planning in geothermal research before the energy crisis came on, has been conducting extensive geothermal energy experiments in the volcano area.

A team has spent $750,000 to drill into Kilauea Volcano, and the project leader is convinced that if drilling goes deep enough, the chances are good of finding steam trapped in the bowels of proper technology.

WASHINGTON (UPI) - There is increasing concern that antibiotics are being overused in the United States and the editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association says patient pressure is partly to blame. "Most patients expect some medication," said Dr. Robert H. Moser, "and this is where the wicket gets sticky."

In some cases, he said the illness clearly calls for the use of an antibiotic. The treatment is prescribed and the patient is satisfied. But it is not so simple in situations involving nonspecific sore throats, upper respiratory tract infections and coughs with wheezes. These require bacterial cultures in the laboratory and it may be 24 hours before the doctor knows the cause of the illness, and whether or not an antibiotic should be prescribed.

But Moser said the patient is still in the physician's office and if the doctor does not prescribe medication, the patient will leave dissatisfied, thinking the doctor is indecisive or uninformed. "The temptation, then, is to treat and once treatment is begun, the tendency is to complete the course," Moser said.

Moser was replying editorially to a report in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association by a government health official and a university medical researcher who believe antibiotics are grossly overused in the U.S. They wondered if the risks were beginning to outweigh the bene-

Dr. Henry E. Simmons, deputy assistant secretary for health of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), and Dr. Paul D. Stolley, of Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Health, cited estimates that the annual number of new and refilled prescriptions for antibiotics presented to drug stores jumped from 100 million in 1964 to 170 million in 1971. They said one of every five prescriptions issued is for an antibiot-

Moser said the simple truth is that many patients seen by the general practitioner or internist need little medications, much less antibiotics. "I suspect a major dimension of our problem has been created by our inability to resist the pressures of patients and the constrictions of time," he said.

"It is unrealistic to believe that any physician wishes to use drugs that are not indicated. Patient pressure on the other hand is a formidable force. The American Medical Association intends to expand its efforts to encourage physicians to resist this pressure.

"It is here that we come down to the basic element of the problem. We must educate the patient. We need a vast program to educate the public. They lay media must assume an obligation to undo much of the damage they have done in dramatizing 'wonder drugs' and 'wizard cures.'

"They must counter the cultural tradition that says mild pain equals analgesic; unhappiness equals tranquilizer; fever equals antibiotic."

a kind of permanent battery to keep the earth going.

Nationwide Energy Crunch

Old Sol's Punch Can Cool

Without the beneficial rays of Old Sol, you wouldn't be alive now. Neither would any other human, animal or plant life. Earth would be a dead planet without growth and no future.

With the sun, the earth manages to hum along despite wars and pollution. General knowledge of how solar energy can be tapped for electricity and building heat has been around for

But man has generally ignored solar energy—the sun's heat—because of the abundance and cheapness of oil and gas. This is no longer true.

Because of the energy crisis, interest in solar energy is now about as hot as the sun itself. Scientists are predicting that, given the proper financing, solar energy could be developed into an abundant fuel supply within the next 15 years. Some experts contend that if the country commits enough money and manpower to the effort, by the year 2000 solar energy, could provide 35 per cent of the nation's total building heating needs and 20 per cent of all electrical needs. They are confident because they point out that solar energy reaching the earth in three days more than matches the combined energy of all the world's fossil fuels. There are some problems which will have to be conquered.

The cost of producing electricity through solar power plants is now higher than for comparable nuclear or gas- and coal-fired plants. Heavy additional funding is needed for research to slash the cost.

Solar water and space heaters aren't always reliable and there's a large installation cost. Ways of making the system more reliable and cutting the cost are needed. Achieving these goals isn't considered hard.

Rooftop solar units are ugly. Some techniques of hiding them from public view have to be found.

There must be a willingness by large-scale developers to use solar heating. Thus far, with some exceptions, there has been a lack of interest among subdividers. They have been discouraged by the high cost of the units. It's believed that some government financial assistance is needed to help put the units on new housing.

Just how do you make electricity out of the sun's heat? It's simple, according to the experts.

First-Put a collector (something that can absorb the sun's heat) system out over a large area of land.

The collector contains a fluid. The collector has mirrors which focus the sun's rays on the fluid. This heats up

Second—Pipe the fluid to a central power plant where the heat turns water into steam. The steam turns the turbine and puts out electricity.

Main hangup with the plants is the cost of collector which has to cover a large number of square miles because the sun's energy falls in a very dispersed manner. So, you have to have a lot of collectors out soaking up the heat.

Developer of perhaps the most advanced solar collector is Dr. John Russell, manager of special projects for General Atomic Co. of La Jolla, Calif.

Russell, an energetic solar enthusiast, believes that his collector may just solve the cost problem, which involves a bank of mirrors.

"The important thing in my concept is that the mirrors used to focus the sun's rays don't have to be moved as they do in other collector schemes," he said. "The mirrors never move." Russell's collector would consist of separate mirrors fixed to the ground. The mirrors making up the collector would be curved so that they would loop down and then up. Each mirror would be terraced in relation to the others, so that it could always pick up the rays of the sun without having to move an inch. The rays would be focused on a pipe running above each of the mirrors. The pipe, containing dry nitrogen, would move back and forth so that the focus of the reflected rays of the sun would always be on it. Space age sensors would keep the pipe moving to a position where the focus always would be on it. Dry nitrogen in the pipes would be heated up to 1,000 degrees and go into the power plant where it would turn water into steam. The steam would turn the turbine and create electricity.

A nagging problem is the question of how to store enough heat to produce electricity when the sun isn't out.

Russell thinks it can be done with rocks. The hot nitrogen would heat up rocks which would be kept in insulated storage. When heat was needed, nitrogen would be passed through the rocks to pick up the heat. The heat would be whipped through to make steam.

Another problem, Russell said, is the large area needed to house the collectors. Russell said 10 square miles of land would be needed for a plant that could put out enough power for a million people.

About 90 per cent of the area would be taken up by the collector system.

"But one mitigating thing is that the plant would be in the desert where there is a lot of space," he said. "The desert is needed because that's where most of the sun is."

Solar Thermal Collectors Heat Maryland Classrooms

TIMONIUM, Md. (UPI) — The sun is heating one wing of an elementary school in a test to see if solar energy can supplement oil heat. Initial reports indicate the experimental system is working well.

The National Science Foundation is financing the $427,000 pilot project at Timonium Elementary School. It is one of four such experiments to test the use of sunpower for heating schools.

The roof of one of three wings of the single story school building has been equipped with solar energy collectors which heat water that is used in turn to warm classrooms. The other two wings of the 650-pupil school are heat-mental project from which we can study the feasibility of using solar energy to heat a school efficiently and inexpensively," said Raymond A. Fields, a deputy director of the NSF. "We want to see if it's a viable and sensible system. "We will collect data from our study and pass it on to architects and businessmen who will hopefully use it in designing factories, schools, shopping centers and eventually homes," he Design of the system for the local school began in January and it was put into use on March 6. It actually started heating classrooms March 11. "The system put out more heat than the engineers expected it to," said Principal Vance A. Criswell. But he said because of unseasonably warm weather, the system might not get a real test until next winter.

The solar system is capable of storing enough heated water for up to four days in a 15,000-gallon tank. If more than four straight cloudy days are experienced, a conventional backup oil-fired unit will be used.

AAI Corp., of Cockeysville, Md., a private engineering firm, designed and built the system, putting $73,000 of the firm's money into it. The company has patented much of its work and eventually plans to market a solar heating system.

"It's certainly living up to expectations," a company official said.

Walter Friend, an AAI marketing manager, was unable to estimate what the cost of such a system would be for a private industry, but said future systems similar in size to the Timonium school unit could cost less since much of the expense was for initial

An NSF spokesman says solar heating systems have been used for homes and small buildings, but never for a structure the size of the elementary schools.

The Timonium Elementary School project is the first of four to be completed. Similar NSF-funded programs are under way at schools in Boston, Warrenton, Va., and Osseo, Minn., a suburb of Minneapolis.

Pomona College Prof Plans Eclipse Flight time on both the main Island of Tahiti

A unique opportunity to view one of the longest total eclipses of the sun from an ideal vantage point in the southern Hemisphere is being offered this summer as part of a 22-day scientific expedition to the South Pacific.

Hosted by Dr. Robert Chambers, Professor of Astronomy and Director of the Observatory at Pomona College, the expedition features a special itinerary developed by John Gibson Travel, Los Angeles, in cooperation with Air

New Zealand. The tip will take professional and amateur astronomers to the most scenic destinations in the South Pacific including Tahiti, Fiji, Australia and New Zealand where they will observe scientific phenomena visible only in the skies of the southern Hemisphere. Departing Los Angeles on June 7, the expedition will be highlighted by the spectacle of a total eclipse. To view the eclipse, expected to be in totality for up to four minutes, the group will travel to a remote section of southwestern Australia, the only land area where it will be visible.

Participants will be able to aid Dr. Chambers in several experiments and photographic exercises for scientific publication, conduct individual research and photograph the event.

Throughout the tour, the itinerary offers a full scientific program of lectures, astronomical observation and inspections of scientific centers in the South Pacific. The group will have the opportunity to view many constellations, star clusters and galaxies only seen in the Southern Hemisphere.

Beginning with a flight from Los Angeles to Papeete, the group will spend

Continuing to Fiji, there will be programs on Southern Hemisphere phenomena and late evening viewings with the aid of equipment and sky objects. Time also will be spent in Nandi and on beautiful Yanuca Island with its white sand beaches and clear

From Fiji, the group proceeds to Australia stopping in Sydney en route to Perth. The itinerary includes a visit to the Sydney Observatory and lectures on eclipses in preparation for erly town of Western Australia, has been selected for a special briefing and viewing of the eclipse. On the return trip; the group will visit Australia's capital at Canberra and tour Mt. Stromlo Observatory before traveling to New Zealand's North Island. There, time is spent in Auckland, New Zealand's largest city, and in Rotoua, the fascinating thermal wonderland with hot springs; geysers and mud pools.

On the return, a day is spent in Hawaii where members of the expedition can relax before returning home.

Price of the 22-day expedition is $1,995 per person including round trip eocnomy class air fare from the West Coast, first class hotel accommodations, the scientific program, most meals, sightseeing and land transportation.

S. Agency Reduces Estimate Of Tremendous Offshore Oil Pools

The U.S. Geological Survey has cut its estimates on how much gas and oil lie offshore the United States but still considers the supply "a tremendous magnitude.".

"It's sort of like estimating the unknown," a spokesman for the survey said. "But it's

Dr. Vincent McKelvey, director of the survey, released figures lower than those given - with strong qualifications-to Congress in January by Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton.

Morton told a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee Jan. 24 that "by geological inference," it was estimated there were 200 billion barrels of oil and 850 trillion cubic feet of natural gas considered "potentially recoverable" in waters surrounding the United States to a depth of 200 meters.

McKelsey's new figures tiate between "reserves" and technology under present ecolowered the estimate to a range of 75.6 to 142.6 billion barrels of oil and liquid gas, and between 465.8 to 882.8 trillion cubic feet of gas. --

- McKelvey said one could arrive at improper conclusions regarding offshore drilling if one failed to differen"resources."

"Distinguishing between reserves and resources gives a rough count of birds in the hand and an estimate of birds in the bush," McKelvey said. Reserves, he said, "are identified deposits known to be recoverable with current nomic conditions."

Resources include "materials that have been identified but cannot now be extracted because of economic or technologic factors as well as economic or subeconomic materials that are yet to be discovered," he said.

Richard F. Meyer, deputy chief of the Office of Energy Resources of the survey, said the figures given earlier by Morton were about four years old. He said new research was the basis of the newer figures, and it was possible these would be revised as more drilling was done.

sion nonetheless did not render useless President Nixon's order for a tenfold increase in leasing of offshore tracts to oil companies.

"It's absurd to say that because you have under 200 billion barrels of oil, you shouldn't pursue offshore drilling," Meyer said.

SOVIET SATELLITES PREDICTED TO BEAR BRUNT OF OIL CRISIS

American officials believe the uneasy Middle East truce will mean a reduction in the amount of Arab oil flowing to the Soviet Union, with the eastern European satellites bearing the brunt of the cut-able as in the past to supply crude oil to its satellites. As a manded by the Arab states.

WASHINGTON (UPI) - result, Bulgaria, Hungary and Poland recently have made substantial purchases of Libyan petroleum at skyrocketing auction prices.

Hungary and Bulgaria were said to have purchased 500 thousand metric tons each from Tripoli at equally high prices.

Even those East European nations not buying Libyan oil are being hit by recent sharp increases in posted prices because their purchase agreements call for payment in goods. This means the eastern Europeans are getting less for their exchange.

U.S. officials estimate that Russia will increase oil production from 430 metric tons last year to about 474 million tons in 1975, with about 135 million tons being earmarked for export. Of this, about 50 million tons would go to its eastern European allies. These officials are convinced this can only complicate the existing energy problems of the satellites.

officials believe Moscow is and will continue to direct more of its oil to western nations with the hard currency needed so badly by the Kremlin.

The Soviet trade ministry already has said it will charge more for oil sold to West, leading officials here to conclude that Russia will limit oil shipments to its satellites to what already is Despite Soviet denials, U.S. called for under existing formal agreements.

The officials predicting a cutback in the flow of oil to Russia noted that in the past the Kremlin has provided arms to the Arab countries in return for oil. With the battlefronts now relatively quiet, they said, these arms shipments can be expected to decline, meaning Moscow will get less oil.

Since much of that oil normally would have been exported to the West and since the Soviet Union can't step up its own output enough to fill the gap-shipments to the eastern Europeans are expected to be curtailed. The eastern European nations already are feeling the pinch and many have imposed fuel and power conservation measures to stretch out available oil supplies and increase production.

Russia has criticized the failure of its own domestic industry to step up crude off production rapidly enough and has refused to expand oil exports to neighboring Fin-

All of which, officials here say, indicates that the Soviet Union has been hit far more seriously by the energy shortage than Moscow has been willing to concede publicly.

indefinitely for a telephone. The public has no doubt where the fault lies - "government red tape and ineptitude" are commonly given the blame. But the Telephone Department has a different answer. It blames its subscribers for the mess.

India's State Minister for Communications, Sher Singh, stated in Parliament that the total figure for unpaid teleastronomical sum of 730 million rupees (about $1 million). Singh said the delinquents included some of the government's own ministries.

If the Telephone Department was paid for its services, the Minister implied, it

Settlers In Beleagured Golan Heights Determined To Stay

By RICHARD C. GROSS

RAMAT MAGSHIMIN, Israeli-Occupied Syria (UPI) — A buff and olive camouflaged Syrian army truck sits rusting limply in a barbed wire enclosure surrounded by farm implements, its left wheel shorn off by a Syrian shell.

Settlers on this agricultural outpost only a mile west of daily on their way from the cluster of beige stone houses to the village's tiny supermarket whose shelves are nearly bare.

The truck is a reminder that the Syrians overran their homes in the October war. They killed 14,000 turkeys, an act that is remembered and anourned among these farm-

"Everyone who came to live here knew what the score was," said villager Yitzhak Nes, 30. He scuffled the toe of a worn brown shoe into the packed sand in front of the supermarket where a tall young man with a red beard and black skullcap sat behind

"We are determined to stay, no matter what," Nes said. His name in Hebrew means Miracle.

The valley's towns and settlements came under Syrian artillery barrages prior to the 1967 war. Israel does not want to take such chances again.

Since the Six-Day Israeli victory of 1967, the Syrians have consistently pounded the settlements rising on the Heights. Children have spent weeks at a time sleeping in shelters for protection against sudden nighttime bombardments.

Israeli's air force used to retaliate, but now the possibility of an escalated conflict-in the aftermath of a war that generally demoralized Israel's population — keeps the warplanes grounded, or at least on their own side of the front line.

Finland Practices Censorship In Bid To Keep Russia Happy

By PHILIP M. STONE HELSINKI (UPI) — In most countries publishers are fighting for the rights to Alexander Solzenitsyn's "Gulag Archipelago." In Finland no publisher will go near it.

When Fred Astaire danced with Cyd Charisse across Finnish television screens in the Hollywood film "Silk Stockings," the Labor Union's Peace Committee and the Russian embassy protested. The television network replied it made a mistake in showing the film.

The Solzhenitsyn book showed the Finnish obsession with self-censorship when relations with the Soviet Union are at stake, and televising "Silk Stockings" showed what happens when self-censorship is ignored.

In early March the Tammi publishing house, which had Finnish first rights to "Gulag Archipelago," refused its option. The company's managing director, Jarl Hellemann, said, "It had become a political question rather than a literary question in Finland."

Hellemann freely admitted his company, which has very close contacts with the Social Democratic government, was fetch the composer, jammed practicing self-censorship on a matter which could disturb relations with the Soviet Union, Finland's neighbor to the Publishing sources said that before the Tammi decision, the major publishing houses agreed not to pick up the option if Tammi turned it down. All thus passed by potentially huge profits.

Within hours of the Tammi decision, the Swedish publishing firm, Wahlstrom and Widstrand, which had the Swedish rights, said it received permission from Solzhenitsyn's lawyer to publish a Finnish edition for Finns living in Sweden.

There was little doubt copies of the Finnish version would quickly find their way across the Baltic Sea into Finnish hands. The book is available already in Finland in Russian and Swedish, and soon will be in English.

The showing of "Silk Stockings", the story of an American film producer in Paris who persuades a Russian composer not to return to Moscow and who then marthe MTV television network telephone switchboard with complaints.

The Labor Union's Peace Committee protested the next day, saying the film showed "the most brutal, naive attitudes of the Cold War which has passed." Two days later the Russian embassy wrote a letter of complaint.

The network apologized and said, "We regret if the film hurt our relations with the Soviet Union or was against Finnish policy." It said showing the film was an accident.

Finland's foreign policy is based on strict neutrality coupled with strong, friendly relations with the Soviet Union. The country is highly sensitive to anything that could hurt its friendship with Mos-

Prof. Osmo Wiio, head of the Research Institute of Business Economics, said, "The increase in self-censorship means we can't write in quite as free a way about our Eastern neighbor and Socialists. Nobody says we can't, but we know we get into trouries a military officer sent to ble if we do."

Nepalese Seek To Develop Trade With Red China

By BHOLA RANA na

KATMANDU, Nepal (UPI) -The 54,000 square-mile kingdom of Nepal, sandwiched between Red China and India, is trying hard to develop trade ties with Red China and the adjoining region of Tibet in addition to those it already has with India.

A five-member delegation from the world's only Hindu kingdom has been in the forbidden Tibetan capital city of Lhasa since March 20 to study prospects for trade.

After the Red Chinese takeover of Tibet in 1950, Nepal was the only country permitted to maintain a consulate in expected here next month.

Lhasa after India was ordered out.

The Nepalese trade team, which has the cooperation of Red China, also is seeking the return of goods left behind in Tibet by Nepalese merchants when the Red Chinese Army marched in. Officials here decline to speculate on the value of the goods.

Trade figured prominently in talks Nepal's 29-year-old King Birenda had with Red Chinese leaders during his state visit last December. He sald then that Nepal was "trying to build up" its trade. A trade mission from Tibet is

The formidable Himalayan heights have always acted as a barrier to Nepal's foreign trade. Goods shipped between Nepal and Tibet are funneled through the 72-mile Katmandu-Lhasa road which was built in the early 1960s with Chinese aid. Border trade is conducted through high mountain passes. It is difficult to determine the exact amount of Sino-Nepalese trade since no accounting is made of free and open dealings along the 500 miles of border. State-to-state trading is estimated at less than $1 million annually. This does not include commodity aid to Nepal under which Red Chinese goods are sold here to meet the local costs of Red Chinese-aided projects.

Nepal exports consumer goods to Red China, including soap and food. Red China sends Nepal about 25,000 sacrificial sheep and goats a year (they are sacrified each October to pacify the goddess Bhagwati) and receives dried red pepper in return.

The Katmandu Valley has become known as "China's chili farm."

Today, 90 per cent of Nepal's trade is with India, its southern neighbor. But India has not been able to meet Nepal's growing needs, particularly for construction material. In the past, New Delhi would have looked with suspicion on any Nepalese moves to develop trade with Red China. But now the Indian government has overcome to a great extent the Red China phobia which earlier characterized relations with Nepal.

India also is aware that it is in no position to meet all of landlocked Nepal's growing needs. So while India may harbor suspicions about the latest Nepalese trade moves, it is unlikely to raise any obstacles.

Mom's Trapped By Mail Pouch

By Abigail Van Buren © 1974 by Chicago Tribune-N. Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: When our son, John, came home from college for a weekend, he brought his soiled laundry in a new U.S. mail bag. He said a friend had loaned it to him, and asked him to be sure to return it.

I told John that it was stolen property—that I didn't want it in the house, and to please take it to the post office. After several days, the bag was still in the laundry room, so I gave it to our mail carrier.

John was upset. He said he had promised his friend he would return it and I had put him in a very embarrassing spot. My husband agreed with our son and said my first loyalty should have been to John.

We brought this up at a dinner party, and had varied and interesting responses.

What would you have done?

MRS. F.

DEAR MRS. F.: I would NOT have given it to the mailman. I would have first provided John with a proper laundry bag and then advised him to return the U.S. mail bag to his "friend"-and on the double.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are retired. Our assets amount to approximately one-half million dollars-not too big an estate for some folks these days, but it's a lot for us. I think it is time I enjoyed some of the pleasures that money can buy. For instance, I can't remember the last time we went on a vacation trip.

We have always bought our clothing at rummage sales, our furniture at garage sales and Goodwill. We have never had a new car. Always bought them second hand. We live in a tiny house, and have skimped and saved on everything. We weren't ashamed, either. We used to brag about how long we'd had something and how little we paid for it.

What's my problem? After having lived this way almost all my life, I told my husband I wanted him to loosen up with the money, but the older he gets the harder he pinches the pennies. After 70, wouldn't you think he'd loosen his grip?

Please, no city or state. Just your answer.

TIRED OF SKIMPING

DEAR TIRED: It will be hard to teach your old horse new tricks, but it's worth a try. Start out by investigating vacation tours. See America first! Select the most expensive, but settle for the least costly. Insist on a clothing allowance-but ask for twice as much as you really want. Hang in there. Nothing is impossible.

DEAR ABBY: When a friend dies and I pay the family a condolence call, I never know what to say. Should I talk about the one who has died? Or should I try to make the family feel better and cheer them with jokes and humorous stories?

I feel so awkward just sitting there in silence, yet forcing conversation at a time like that seems so artificial. Please tell me how to act. BEWILDERED

DEAR BEWILDERED: How one handles his grief is a personal matter. Let the one who has suffered the loss take the lead. If he feels like talking, encourage him to talk. If he prefers to sit in silence, don't intrude on his silence. Friends should call, bring food, offer to run errands, and do what needs to be done. A hug, a squeeze of the hand, a look which says, "I'm here, if you need me," conveys more than a thousand words.

The year is 1792 and we are there . . .

In a letter to Thomas Jefferson. George Washington complained that his enemies "have embraced without restraint every opportunity to weaken the confidence of the people" in him. At one time, according to Jerome Davis, author of Character Assassination, "criticism was so scathing and so unfair that Washington declared that he would rather be in the grave than in the Presidency."

Washington often reflected on the "malignant industry, and persevering falsehoods" with which he was assailed. His countrymen, however, eventually bestowed upon him the highest honor within their power: "Father of his Country." And while the office has its perils as well as its rewards, the tragedy is that the perils come to the President when he is alive and the rewards come to him when he is dead.

AN APPEAL FOR FAIRNESS IGMEN ARE NOT ELECTED

April 19, 1792

"THE HIGH-FLIERS IN AND OUT OF CONGRESS TALK OF NOTHING BUT IMPEACHMENT ... AS IF CONGRESS WERE WRAPPED UP IN THE CLOAK OF INFALLIBILITY . . . " (PHILIP FRENEAU, NATIONAL GAZETTE, APRIL 19, 1792).

GOVERNMENT!

In these calumnious days of the hangmen, the 37th President of the United States stands alone against the "mallgnant industry and persevering falsehoods" that have assailed the Presidency from Washington to Nixon.

Washington bitterly complained that his enemies "have embraced without restraint every opportunity to weaken the confidence of the people" in him, and we see the same happening now-with deadlier impact and foreboding consequences; We have, after all, come a long way from an agrarian society of four million to an industrialized nation of 214 million souls, and the weaponry too has charged from the scaffold to the hydrogen bomb; assassination is no longer a stealthy trade—it's big business, made legitimate by big interests, media's demigods, George Meany, Ralph Nader, John Gardner, and a consortium of politicians, most of whom are beneficiaries of the complot to destroy an American President.

A. The election of 19 members of the House Judiciary Committee has been partially subsidized by George Meany's organizations, a principle beneficiary being Chairman Peter Rodino, with $31,000. These are the men and women charged with the "impeachment inquiry."

B. Meany's AFL-CIO mails its "weekly" to 13 million members urging them to bludgeon the President of the United States. C. Ralph Hader, using his legions and tax-exempt funds in a massive attempt to corrupt the electoral process, subverted the American consumer with 250,000 pamphlets calling for impeachment of the President. D. The so-called American Civil Liberties Union lubricated the wheels of impeachment with more than 1,000,000 copies of its tracts. E. John Gardner and his Common Cause are among the worst offenders. After his stint as an objective champion of puritanical government, he emerges as a counterfeit, a self-seeking Trojan horse. His distribu-tion of a half-million sheets inciting impeachment of the President is a cruel hoax on his followers. There are literally hundreds of impeachment groups that are being clandestinely financed by the President's would-be pallbearers; they mushroom everywhere and like locusts swarm the Presidency!

Aided and abetted by the media the majority of the House Judiciary Committee has already found Richard Nixon guilty! Such is the frame of a nation.—clubbed, bullied, and coerced!

They are so intent on doing the bidding of George Meany that they would even deny the batics of reporters, columnists and newscasters will not alter the simple truth. History will judge them for what they are—ASSASSINS. A WARNING: After a lynching the lynchers scatter in search of anonymity, but there will be no anonymity for the President's lynchers, and no escape. The same people who have been traumatized into a lynching stampede will retreat, and the Congressmen who would vote impeachment will stand alone, faced with the calumny of their deed.

MILITARY AIR FARES GOING UP: Halfpriced military stand-by fares on commercial airliners soon will be a thing of the past. So will reserved-seat travel at two-thirds the regular coach fare. Beginning May 1, service personnel on leave will have to pay a new, higher, reservation rate. 75 per cent of regular coach fare. The Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB), which approved the new rate plan (requested by the major domestic airlines), said it supported the airlines' contention that military people now can afford higher fares. The CAB ruling on military fares was followed by a general overlimit of U.S. air fares. Some short-haul fares are being hiked as much as 39 per cent while fares for flights of more than 750 miles will drop, some of them by as much as 5.5 per cent. These changes also will affect military travelers since they involve the basic rates on which leave rates are figured. AMTRAK FARES ALSO BEING HIKED: Military people also will pay more to travel by rail. Beginning April 16, passenger fares on Amtrak's nationwide train system will be increased five per cent. Military fare is 75 per cent of coach fare (except for metroliners, where full fare is charged). Amtrak coach fare from Los Angeles to Chicago will go up $4.50, to $94.50. Accordingly, military fare will be hiked $3.38, from $67.50 to $70.88. . . . RETIREES TO HEAR PEACE OFFICER: Lt. Brad Gates of the county Sheriff's Department will address the Orange County Chapter of The Retired Officers Association when it meets at the Santa Ana Marine helicopter station Officer's Club Saturday. Retired and active duty officers of all services are welcome to attend the dinner-meeting, but reservations are necessary. Contact Capt. George Gorham, 1042 W. Palmyra, Orange (phone 538-5664).

RETURN 'CERTS' CARDS PROMPTLY: Veterans studying at colleges and universities under the G.I. Bill are advised to return their "cert" cards promptly to insure payment of allowances for the final month of schooling. Veterans Administration officials said the certification-ofattendance card veterans receive with their next-to-final checks should be filled out, signed and returned to the VA. Otherwise, they say, the VA can't prepare a final check for the current school year. For most vets, final months of training are May or June, and most "cert" cards will be mailed this month. Forms already have been mailed to vets whose enrollment periods end earlier, the VA said. Another reason for returning "cert" cards promptly: If a card is not returned at the end of the current semester, the veteran cannot automatically be enrolled for upcoming summer or fall sessions, if he plans to continue. Also, it was pointed out, veterans attending college under the G.I. Bill must keep the VA informed on changes in the number of dependents and changes in schooling programs. "At the same time," VA officials said, "college registrars should insure that the veteran's enrollment for the school term is certified promptly to the VA, to keep allowance checks coming on time.".... 101ST AIRBORNE SLATES REUN-ION: The Villa Hotel in San Mateo will be the site of the 101st Airborne Division Association's annual reunion Aug. 7 through 11. Hugh C. Orr. county spokesman for the 101st, said former members of the division are being sought so that "friendships made while serving as a Screaming Eagle may be kept alive." For information, contact Orr at 1831 E. Orange Grove Ave., Orange, or call 538-9381.

NAVY TO HIKE EXCHANGE PRICES: Prices on several items carried by Navy exchanges are due to go up from 5 to 10 per cent within a few weeks, the Navy Resale System Office reports. Items affected include kitchenware, electrical appliances, hand tools, some men's and women's clothing and juvenile furniture. Prices of party goods and greeting cards will go up slightly, but will still be below manufacturers' list prices. The Resale Office said the increases were necessary to help meet higher operating costs at exchanges. But despite the price hikes. Navy exchanges will still provide an overall saving of 120 to 25 per cent below commercial stores, the Navy office said. . . . ALL IN THE (SEA SERVICE) FAMILY: Kenneth A. La Belle of 8261 Carnation, Buena Park, didn't follow in his dad's Hootsteps. But almost. Dad is a Navyman. Ken joined the Coast Guard. Nevertheless, "dad," who is retired Naval Reserve Cmdr. Francis F. La Belle, launched his son on his sea-service career by swearing him in at the Coast Guard Recruiting Station in Santa Ana. Ken shipped for a four-year cruise, but since he joined under the delayed enlistment and guaranteed school progriam, he will "tread water" at home until June 4. Then it'll be boot camp at Alameda and hospital acorpsman school at New London, Conn., or San Diego. WAC VETERANS TO MEET MATURDAY: Queen City Chapter No. 57 of the WAC Veterans Association will meet at 1 p.m. Saturday in the Great Western Savings & Loan Community Room, 2999 Westminster Ave., Seal Beach. Ms. Helen Murphy, chapter president, said all ex-WACs are welcome. Call her at 543-8702. Offering Americare® 39, a very different kind of life insurance policy that enables us to provide the most protection we can for what we believe to be the lowest published rates for this type of coverage.

"You need more life insurance.

You know you need it. You wouldn't be reading this if you didn't.

What you don't need is to replace the worry of not having enough life insurance with the worry of how to pay for it.

At American Republic, we have created an affordable life insurance policy. One that provides meaningful protection for a very reasonable cost.

One you can own without talking to an agent, a doctor, anybody. Because everything you need is included in this advertisement.

> Life insurance that sticks to the original idea of life insurance. Protection.

Our policy? Americare 39 Term Life Insurance.

It's purpose? Pure protection. You pay us while you're living. We pay your beneficiary if you die.

Because it is protection and protection alone, we can provide as much insurance as we can for as low a premium as we can for each year of your policy.

$25,000 benefit through age 39.

The whole idea of Americare 39 is to provide a lot of protection for a little money.

So, while you are between the ages of 18 and 39, you get $25,000 of life insurance.

At age 18, your cost is $4.50 a month. But as you grow older. it costs more to provide your $25,000 of life insurance, So. vour monthly premium rises slightly most every year. At 25, it is $5 a month. At 30, it is $5.40. At 39, it is $8.60.

These are examples. On the inside page is the complete Table of Benefits and Rates. with all figures for all ages.

Above age 39, the premium is frozen at $9 a month.

As you grow older, your need for life insurance may become less. Your estate has grown. Your kids are farther along, not so dependent.

> So, instead of the premiums increasing after age 39, they are frozen at a constant $9 a month. And the coverage is gradually reduced. Some examples: $23,936 at age 40, $10,135 at 50, $4,302 at 60.

> > Rates inside has all the figures. You never pay more than $9 a month for Americare 39 Life Insurance. That's only 30c a day at most.

At age 65, your Americare 39 policy automatically converts to a $1,370 Whole Life Plan building future cash and loan values.

No agent. You deal directly with the Company.

Americare 39 is sold direct. No agent will call on you as a result of your applying for it.

All you need to do to get your own Americare 39 Life Insurance policy is fill out the simple application printed on the back page of this ad and mail it to us. Send no money, just the completed and signed application.

> No physical. Just answer 2 questions about your health.

You don't have to have a physical examination.

Just answer the 2 simple health questions on the application.

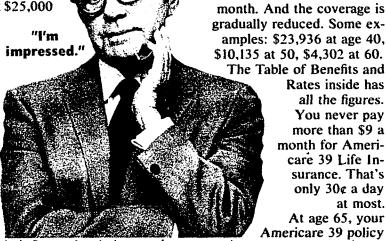

If you qualify-most people do-we send you your policy by return mail.

> You receive a policy issued in your name. You choose whether to put it in force.

The policy you receive is yours and yours alone. It will have your name and a copy of your completed application inside.

But even after receiving your policy you are not obligated in any way.

You choose whether you want its protection.

Jack Benny, America's most famous practitioner of the art of keeping a firm arip on one's wallet, is helping make Americans aware of the value of Americare 39 Life Insurance. As you would expect, Mr. Benny is being paid for his help.

Americare 39 for women.

A woman can have the same principal coverage a man can have, but at rates that are 10% less across the board.

Americare 39 for wives.

A man can also add $2,500 of coverage for his wife to his Americare 39 policy. The cost? Just 41¢ a month at age 18, 49¢ at 30, 77¢ at 39. See the Table of Benefits and Rates for rates for every age.

Americare 39 for children.

You can also add $1,000 of coverage for each of your children under age 21 to your Americare 39 policy for a total cost of 50¢ a month. That's one 50¢ for all of your children no matter how many. And at age 21, each insured child has the guaranteed right to his or her own $25,000 policy with no physical required.

Americare 39 is paying dividends.

We are now paying dividends on Americare 39. With your policy you will receive our current dividend schedule.

Dividend payments can help reduce your premium payments.

We can't guarantee dividends for next year or the year after. No company can.

But we can guarantee one thing: the true value of Americare 39.

We guarantee every benefit and every rate published here.

The face amounts shown for each age are guaranteed. The monthly premiums shown for each age are guaranteed. We cannot change these figures. Ever.

We guarantee your insurability for life.

We also guarantee your insurability. Once you are a policyholder we can never cancel your insurance because of a change in your age or health.

Americare 39: supplementary or basic protection you can own now.

Americare 39 is a Term Life Insurance policy that provides a significant amount of pure protection—up to $25,000—for a very reasonable cost—never more than $9 a month.

It's very easy to buy. Just send us the application.

It's easy to own. It will never, ever cost you more than $9 a month.

It makes a good basic policy if you have no present life insurance.

And it makes a good supplemental policy to any other life insurance you might own.

It is truly life insurance at Jack Benny prices. (That's exactly why we've hired Jack to help us.)

And the way to get this policy—the only way—is to apply direct.

We hope you'll choose to see this extraordinary policy by mailing us your application today."

Here are answers to important questions about Americare 39.

1. Do I send money with my application?

Absolutely not! You receive your policy without risking a cent. Just fold the application with the Business Reply label out and we even pay the postage (or use an envelope if you wish).

2. By mailing the application form, am I obligated in any way?

No. If you qualify, we'll mail your policy to you. You look it over, you decide if you want it. Then—and only then—mail us your first month's premium.

3. When will my coverage be effective?

Your coverage will be effective when we receive your first month's premium.

4. How do I include my wife and children?

You may include $2,500 coverage for your wife and $1,000 coverage for each child under age 21. Just list the dependents you wish covered in the appropriate blanks on the application.

5. Will any children we have in the future be covered? If your children are insured, any newborn child automatically has $1,000 coverage at the third week of life.

Conversion privilege.

On any policy anniversary date up to age 65, you can convert your Americare 39 Term policy for its current face amount to the Company's Whole Life Policy which builds cash and loan values and has a level face amount and a level premium. No physical required, regardless of your health. Thus, with Americare 39, you are insuring your future insurability.

You may already have life insurance. Since it may have value that could not be replaced, we want you to know that Americare 39 is not intended to replace any insurance you may now have. This protection can provide a meaningful measure of extra security at a cost of only a few dollars a month. Or, it can be the foundation of a very realistic life insurance program.

The direct, efficient, money-saving way to bring your family the significant life insurance protection they need.

Your application form is on the back page of this folder

Because we know what it will mean to your family, we hope you'll fill it in and mail it right away.

Here's what you do and how to do it.

- 1. Fill out the simple application form on the back.
- 2. Answer the two questions relating to your, and your family's health history. (Remember, there is no physical examination.)
- 3. If you would like coverage for your wife and/or children added to your policy, just fill in the blanks provided.

4. Sign and date your application.

5. Fold it twice, tape together and drop it in the mail. We even pay the postage! Or if you prefer, put the application in an envelope and mail to American Republic Insurance Company, P.O. Box 1, Des Moines, Iowa 50334.

Please Do Not Send Any Money.

We want you to see your actual Americane 39 policy, and all the important features it contains, before you send any money at all.

When we receive your application, and you qualify, we will send your Americare 39 policy, complete with twelve premium payment envelopes.

Your Americare 39 protection will be in force immediately when the first premium is paid. Simply use the first envelope to mail your check for your first month's premium.

VERY SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP: AGNEW AND SINATRA

Q. Can you tell me if Frank Sinatra is ghosting Spiro Agnew's novel, A Very Special Relationship?—Ellen Newman, Baltimore, Md.

A. Sinatra has a very special relationship with the former Vice President but it hardly includes ghost-writing. At 59 Sinatra is a formerly talented vocalist, but he left Demarest High School in Hoboken, N.J., in his freshman year, and writing is an art he neither practiced nor learned.

PRINCESS ANNE

Q. Does Princess Anne of Great Britain get to buy her own clothes or does she have to wear what her mother tells her to?— Sandra Wallace, Beverly Hills, Calif.

A. Princess Anne's favorite outfit consists of faded blue jeans and a T-shirt, but in public she has to dress matronly a la mama. On the recent royal tour of Australia and New Zealand, Anne dressed like a conservative woman of 30.

Q. Is it not a fact that the U.S. has not benefited in the slightest from the American-Soviet détente and that the man who has benefited the most is Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the Russian writer?—Ian Palmer, Cambridge, Mass.

A. Solzhenitsyn was surely saved by détente. He was imprisoned under the Stalinist regime, and were it not for détente, Brezhnev would surely have had him disappear somewhere in the Gulag Archipelago. The U.S.-Soviet détente has also helped the Kissinger-Nixon Administration avoid a resumption of the dangerous cold war. Kissinger entertains small hope of changing the repressive Soviet internal security system. What he is trying desperately to do is to maintain peace with the Soviet Union since he realizes that war between the world's two superpowers would end in mutual nuclear annihilation.

Q. How long have Tony Martin and Cyd Charisse been married? What are their real names? Are they both finished in films?—John Channing, Eureka, Calif.

A. Cyd Charisse, 51, born Tula Finklea in Amarillo, Tex., and Tony Martin, 61, born Al Morris in San Francisco, have been married 25 years. They are too old for film stardom but continue to sing and dance admirably in supper clubs throughout the world.

CYD CHARISSE AND TONY MARTIN: STILL GOING STRONG

Q. I've read that the most important man in the U.S. today is someone named Peter Rodino. What does this gentleman do?—Martha Cowen, Toronto, Ontario

A. Peter W. Rodino is a Democrat from Newark, N.J., who has served in the House of Representatives for 25 years. He is chairman of the House Judiciary Committee in charge of the impeachment inquiry into President Nixon's fitness to retain office. The son of an Italian immigrant cobbler, Rodino was reared in Newark, worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad, attended the University of Newark Law School, set up his law practice in 1937. He served in North Africa and Italy in World War II, was elected to the Congress in 1948. Although he roomed at one time with Hugh Addonizio, a former Congressman and Mayor of Newark now in jail on an extortion conviction, Rodino is said to be an honest man uncontaminated by New Jersey's corrupt political environment.

MRS. ROOSEVELT

MRS. RUTHERFURD

Q. How did Eleanor Roosevelt feel when she learned about her husband's liaison with Lucy Mercer Rutherfurd? And why didn't she write about Franklin D. Roosevelt's affair with Lucy? I have just read Mrs. Roosevelt's memoirs entitled This I Remember, and there is no mention in it of the Roosevelt-Rutherfurd love affair. How come?—Claire Gris, Boca Raton, Fla. A. It was too painful a memory for Mrs. Roosevelt to write about. FDR had apparently fallen out of love with her, but she in turn had fallen in love with his Presidential work.

Q. Who is the richest actress in television?—Helen O'Farrell, Boston, Mass.

A. Probably Lucille Ball, 62, who after 23 years as America's TV queen of comedy, has amassed a fortune estimated at $7.5 million. Miss Ball will abandon Here's Lucy in September, confine her talents to TV specials.

Q. Was Gertrude Stein a lesbian?—L.L.M., Evanston,

A. A well-known and famous one. For a good account of her relationship with her lover, Alice B. Toklas, read 'Charmed Circle' by James R. Mellow (published by Praeger).

Q. Wasn't a secret hysterectomy performed on Julie Nixon Eisenhower in Indianapolis which will affect her ability to bear children?—T. T., Marion, Ind.

A. No. Doctors simply removed a non-malignant ovarian cyst, a relatively common operation. There was no secret about it. Julie is physically able to have as many children as she and husband David Eisenhower decide they would like.

ANYTHING Once when people engaged in sports for the exhibitantion, exercise and body-conditioning, they were told athletics also helped build character.

Today, sports is big business, a money-making occupation for millions. Athletes play in pain-with broken bones, torn cartilage, strained ligaments. They are injected with steroids and painkillers of all kinds. The 'Game'must go on. They must win.

Why? Because winning means money. Bob Gibson of the St. Louis Cardinals, Bob Kuechenberg of the Miami Dolphins, Willis Reed of the New York Knicks, countless others have competed while enduring physical anguish.

Victory has become the magnificent obsession, so obsessive in fact, that some athletes are now competing under hypnosis, turning themselves into zombies.

At the World Sports Medicine Federation Congress held in Australia recently, Dr. Guy Grant, 33, of Devonport, Tas-mania, a medical doctor, revealed that he hypnotized dozens of athletes, instilling in them an overpowering concentration and desire to win.

DOCTOR-HYPNOTIST GUY GRANT

Dr. Grant, who under self-hypnosis once played squash for 43 consecutive hours at Sydney University, says, "In the chain of events leading from the decision to move a muscle to its actual movement, it is the willpower which tires first, and this is what responds best to hypnotic suggestions."

Many of the trackmen hypnotized by Grant have become consistent winners in Australia during the past five years.

"My men frequently demoralize other athletes," he explains, "who know they are running against hypnotized competitors.

"During one 400-meter race one of the opposition became completely demoralized when he heard the persistent pounding of my runner's feet. He dropped out and said he couldn't keep up with a zombie."

Dr. Grant maintains that under hypnosis, an athlete can better follow instructions and endure more pain and discomfort in punishing events. Hypnosis can also improve the stamina of the long-distance runner.

THE GOLD RISH As the inflation rate increases throughout the world-throughout the world-guesstimates about the U.S. rate for 1974 range from 7 to 10 percent--investors are sure that the U.S. dollar will lose much of its purchasing power before year's end.

They are therefore buying up gold, the metal of seemingly perennial value.
When gold hit $183 an ounce on the London market on March 1, Dr. Nico Diederichs, Finance Minister of South Africa, jubilantly applauded.

"In all my life," he told newsmen, "I've never felt so optimistic about the future of the Republic of South Africa" (which still boasts the largest, most productive gold mines in the world).

"We have practically every commodity the world wants, and as there has been a basic shift in values away from paper currencies and towards gold and diamonds and other commodities, our vast store of resources represents a growing source of wealth for the nation.

"Our only weakness seems to lie in our insufficient supply of skilled labor. But I feel that we will now be better able to finance the training and development of our nonwhite people to ease this problem."

Ironically, one group of people who vehemently oppose South Africa's apartheid system of racism -- the Arabs -are doing the most to help South Africa's economy. Dollarrich from their oil sales. the Arab sheiks have stimulated the gold rush to new heights, may eventually boom the price to an astronomical $250 an ounce, providing South Africa with possibly the highest growth rate of

"THOMAS JEFFERSON— AN INTIMATE HISTORY"

This month
the publishing house of Norton will bring out Fawn Brodie's biography fferson. It is of Thomas Jefferson. It is one of the outstanding biographies of our time, deeply researched, beautifully written, carefully structured.

Jefferson's wife died when he was 39, and most of his biographers assumed that Jefferson's sexuality thereupon atrophied, that his capacity to love disappeared, that his passion for the opposite sex vanished or was sublimated in work.

Mrs. Brodie fearlessly investigates the women in Jefferson's life: Betsey Walker, the wife of his neighbor John Walker; the widow Martha Wayles Skelton; Maria Cosway, the unhappy wife of the British painter; and Sally Hemings, the beautiful quadroon slave at his home in Monticello who was a half sister to Jefferson's wife.

With meticulous and scrupulous scholarship, Mrs. Brodie offers one of the most revealing portraits of a brilliant, fascinating, versatile American President who took many pains to conceal his tragic, private life.

FIRSTAID KITFOR THE ENERGY CRISIS.

GE 3-way bulbs. They let you save electricity by switching to lower wattages when bright light is not needed.

Pick up these first-aid supplies (including the Watt Watcher's Guide) where you buy GE bulbs.

Granted it's going to take a lot more than first aid to cure the energy crisis. But at a time like this, every little bit helps.

INTELLIGENCE CONTINUED

When does morality begin and profiteering end? Japan is asking that question with increasing frequency as investigations reveal that its most powerful corporations have formed secret cartels to drive up prices, manipulate markets and cheat the public.

Employees have turned over to the Government Committee Into Business Corruption hitherto secret company files which support charges of profiteering and fraud.

One major oil company. General Sekiyo, for example, has refunded excess profits because it advised its dealers that the oilshortage provides "a rare, once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to increase sales."

The presidents of Japan's "Big Six" trading companies and three leading banks have already appeared before the government's investigating committee, have admitted to so-called "irregularities" and have promised to mend their ways and in some cases to return excess profits.

The Toyo Menka Trading Company has been charged with tax evasion. Mitsubishi Oil has been charged with using the oil crisis to net illegal profits. Mitsui and Company has been accused of watering down its products.

And so it goes. The industrious Japanese public, usually pliant and noncomplaining, is no longer so. It wants blatant profiteering to stop and those responsible to be held accountable. Wholesale prices are rising by 34 percent a year in Tokyo, and the people are

A tiny atoll in the Indian Ocean, Diego Garcia, owned by Great Britain, has become a key and controversial island in overall U.S. naval strategy.

An agreement between the United States and Britain calls for the U.S. to spend about $29 million lengthening the vital aircraft runway on Diego Garcia as well as constructing storage tanks, deepening the anchorage area and improving the maintenance facilities.

Why does the U.S. want a naval base in the Indian Ocean?

Simply because once the Suez Canal is reopened, the Soviet Union will be able to send its ships from the Black Sea into the Indian Ocean quite easily.

The strategic value of the Indian Ocean has increased immeasurably in recent years as the Soviets have sought to establish political bases in India. The Soviet naval force in the Indian Ocean is estimated at 20 ships and will undoubtedly increase.

In 1971, at the height of the Bangladesh war, the U.S. Navy deployed a task force centered around the aircraft carrier Enterprise into the Indian Ocean and realized only too well that it needed a base in the area.

Such a base at Diego Garcia will permit our Navy to refuel ships and operate long-range patrol aircraft to scout for submarines or surface craft.

Sen. Claiborne Pell (D., R.I.) plans to introduce legislation to bar the Pentagon from spending funds to build up naval and air facilities on Diego Garcia, Pell says that such a reaction to the Soviet presence in the area will stimulate the very threat that America fears and would precipitate an escalation of the arms race that neither superpower can afford. He proposes negotiations with the Soviet Union to head off a naval race.

Last year less than 20 percent of feature films submitted to the South African motion picture censors were approved unconditionally. 10 percent were barred outright.

№ Walter Annenberg, multimil-ONGTO multimil-lionaire

U.S. Ambassador to Great Britain since 1969, has long wanted to retire from the diplomatic fold.

Annenberg owns one of the great showplaces in the Palm Springs, Calif., area, an estate complete with pool and private golf course, as well as TV Guide magazine and other successful publishing ventures.

Mr. Annenberg wanted out of London last year so as not "to monopolize the honor indefinitely." But Washington persuaded him to hold off until a suitable successor could be found.

President Nixon reportedly contacted Robert O. Anderson, chairman of Atlantic Richfield Oil, and offered him the job. But Anderson has declined. In these days of the oil crisis, Atlantic Richfield needs him more than ever.
Thus, at this writing, the search for Annenberg's successor continues... unless.

Marlon Brando's Tahitian Island

by Lloyd Shearer

How it all began: Marlon Brando and Tarita in the movie "Mutiny on the Bounty "They have two children and live on his Tahitian island, Tetiaroa, shown on map, where he is building a resort hotel to open soon.

PAPEETE, TAHITI.

hen one asks about Marlon Brando, 50, who lives here with his Tahitian wife, Tarita, and their two children, son Tehotu, 10, and daughter Cheyenne, 3, the replies fall into two categories (1) "Marlon Brando? Never heard of him." (2) "Marlon Brando is a good man, a lovely man. He owns the island of Tetiaroa."

Tetiaroa is an atoll in the South Pacific, 20 minutes by air from Tahiti. It consists at low tide of 12 islands encircled by a coral reef. On the main or highest island, a mile and a quarter in length, Brando is constructing a hotel.

To date it consists of 17 thatched huts which will be expanded to about 25 or 30 on completion. A spokesman for the Office de Développement du Tourisme de la Polynesie Française, says: "The hotel is scheduled to open in May or June, but you know how things are here in Tahiti. We are not sticklers for time. When Marlon is ready, it will open—probably in the summer.

"It will be," he explains, "a place of primitive beauty, huts and a bar, no air conditioning. Marlon wants to keep Tetiaroa as it is, an unspoiled island with simple accommodations, Tahitian food, one of the most beautiful lagoons in these islands.

No end to entertainment

"He plans to have artisans working in all the old Polynesian crafts—canoe-building, weaving, carving. There will be snorkling, sailing in outrigger canoes, fishing. And since Marlon is an ecologist, there will be visits to the sea bird sanctuary and the experimental station for aquatic farming.

"It should be a delightful place for Women in Brando's life: wife Tarita and his 3-year-old daughter Cheyenne.

In 1961 Tarita looked through a copy of PARADE in our West Coast office and gave her first U.S. interview. Then, she had hopes for a film career.

people who want to enjoy a truly primitive island vacation. Exactly who Marlon will permit on his island is another question. He is a very private man, you know, and it may well be that his will turn out to be the most exclusive hotel in the world. I have heard stories that he will approve every single guest or that his hotel manager will."

Henry Rittmeister, who for many years managed the world-famous Hale-kulani Hotel in Honolulu, before Randolph Lee Jr. took over, is scheduled to supervise Brando's operation in Tetiaroa next month.

Rittmeister, like Brando, is married to a Tahitian woman, and knows how to retain Polynesian ambience. He is one of the most widely respected hotel managers in the South Pacific. And Brando's son Tehotu, 10, attends public schools in nearby Papeete, Tahiti.

Brando is indeed fortunate to get him. It is Rittmeister who will develop a rate schedule for Brando's hotel. At the moment no one seems to know how much Brando will charge for what.

A few weeks ago I phoned the actor's secretary, Yvonne Chung, here, and asked what a week's stay at Tetiaroa would cost. "I'm sorry," she said. "The island is not yet open for visitors. There is no price list for anything. Mr. Rittmeister is in Hawaii, and he's the only one who can really give out any information."

10 days in December

Rittmeister later said, "Marlon had a trial run, a trial opening last December just for 10 days, just to see how things would go. It's a modest little operation, 15, 17 bungalows. Several of them were unfinished. The bathrooms worked well. Some of the doors did not. But you must understand, this is not a Hilton or Intercontinental operation.

"Tetiaroa is not the kind of place that will appeal to elderly widows or typical tourists who demand the latest in creature comforts. It's for a select few, at the most 30 or 40 people who want to get away from it all. The truth is that I don't yet know how we will arrange things. We will probably set up a central booking office in Papeete, have our own plane, and fly guests in for, say, $50 or $75 a day, everything included. But please don't hold me to that, because we are still in the process of working it out."

Tetiaroa, 26 miles north of Tahiti, was formerly owned by the royal family of Pomare, and Tahitian royalty used it as a pleasure resort. Ladies of the royal family were sent there prior to marriage for fattening up purposes. In the old days the Polynesians equated beauty with stoutness—the bigger the better. Aimata, Queen Pomare IV, spent two months in Tetiaroa, reportedly gaining '40 pounds, before her marriage.

In 1904, the Pomare family sold the island to Dr. Will J. Williams, a Canadian dentist who subsequently became the British consul in Tahiti. In 1966, one of Dr. Williams' daughters, who had inherited the island, sold it to Marlon Brando for an undisclosed sum.

Brando has been in love with Tahiti since 1960 when MGM filmed Mutiny on the Bounty there. It was during the production that he met Tarita, then 19, a dancing beauty from Bora Bora who was chosen to play opposite him.

Subsequently Tarita was flown to the MGM studios in Culver City for interior photography. Not long after she arrived, a studio press agent escorted her to PARADE's West Coast office and suggested an interview.

She was then as now, a friendly, French-speaking, beautiful young woman, understandably awestruck by the sights and sounds of Los Angeles.

Only in Hollywood

She was also refreshingly forthright. When asked if she had succumbed to the Brando charisma while portraying his Tahitian wife in the picture, she confessed, as the press agent blanched, "No. Marlon is very charming, très gentil, very amusing. But I love him. only in Hollywood. In Papeete I am in love with another man. He is Danish. His name is Christianson Jorgen. He is the cook for the film company. He wants me to marry him. Marlon has never mentioned marriage. I don't know if it is good for a Tahitian girl to marry a white man. It does not work so well in Tahiti unless you have a strong husband who really wants it."

That was 13 years ago. Since then Brando and Tarita have lived together in the house he owns in Tahiti as well as on his island of Tetiaroa.

Their son Tehotu attends public school in Papeete. Their daughter Cheyenne, named after the American Indian tribe, is still too young for school.

From all accounts, Tarita prefers to live on Tahiti instead of Tetiaroa but frequently joins Marlon there. Occasionally she visits Bora Bora, her home island, where she has five brothers and two sisters.

Not a celebrity there

In Tahiti no one invades the Brandos' privacy. Brando is not regarded as a celebrity. Only the French seem to know or care that his "take" from The Godfather and Last Tango in Paris will probably be $10 million.

Tahiti has changed a great deal since a landing strip for jet planes was constructed in Papeete several years ago. Tourism and television have invaded the area, but Brando has managed to find his own sanctuary in Tetiaroa.

Why he decided to build a hotel there, only he knows. A friend says, "It's because like most Western men he is incapable of doing nothing. He is not an alcoholic. He is not a beach bum. He is a man of vigor and intelligence, who will put his island to good use. He is using it not only to give pleasure to others but for conducting research on solar and wind energy. He has already made it a center for atoll research. In short, he is a victim of his heredity and background. He is an American, and as such, he is goaloriented. He needs more than the sun and the sea to make him feel fulfilled. He needs achievement."

Ever since President Nixon's historic visit there, Americans have been increasingly fascinated—and puzzled—by modern China.

Gradually, the picture has emerged of a great, mysterious giant—a land of ancient tradition, revolutionary change and incredibly bizarre politics.

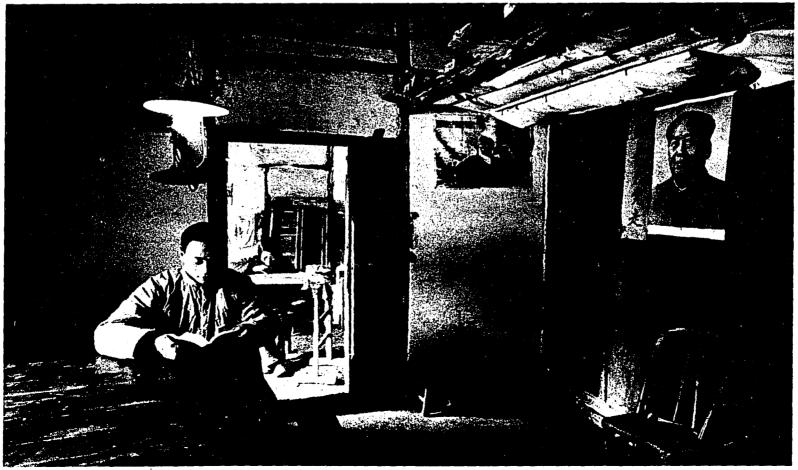

Yet, comparatively little has been told of actual everyday life in China. What is life really like on the massive communal farms and in the factories, schools and hospitals? What, in other words, does it feel like to live and work in the "New China?"

These are some of the questions answered in a series of prize-winning photographs by internationally known photojournalist Giorgio Lotti, who toured China for Italy's Epoca magazine.

THE 100 GREATEST CARS OF THE AUTOMOBILE'S FIRST HUNDRED YEARS

The Gentennial Car Ingot Collection

IN SOLID STERLING SILVER

LIMIT: ONE SET PER SUBSCRIBER

In the Spring of 1875, an Austrian inventor named Siegfried Marcus drove the first successful motor car through the streets of Vienna. Onlookers were amazed, and even frightened. But they would have been even more astonished had they been able to look into the future and see how the automobile has changed the world.

Now we are approaching the centennial of the automobile. To commemorate this significant milestone, The Franklin Mint, the world's largest and foremost private mint, is issuing a limited edition collection of 100 solid sterling silver ingots faithfully portraying the 100 greatest cars of the first hundred years.

GREAT CARS—CHOSEN BY THE EXPERTS

The cars to be honored have been chosen especially for this collection by a distinguished International Board of Advisors, all of whom are recognized authorities on the world's great cars. Their selections make The Centennial Car Ingot Collection a definitive heirloom collection of great authenticity and value. For they have considered all the criteria of greatness, and their choices include cars of every type and era.

The collection will feature the most important and impressive cars of the century—from the pioneering Daimler and Renault, through Henry Ford's "Model T" and the classic Rolls-Royce "Silver Ghost," to the great Jaguar "XK120" and the Mercedes-Benz "C111" with its Wankel engine.

100,000 GRAINS OF STERLING SILVER

The Centennial Car Ingot Collection will consist of 100 ingots, each weighing at least 1000 grains. The complete collection will thus contain one hundred thousand grains of solid sterling silver.

The face of every ingot will bear a faithful portrait of one of the great cars; on the reverse will be an explanation of its importance. Moreover, each ingot will measure 2½" wide and 1½" high—giving it an unusually large surface area to accommodate the beautiful sculptured image. The result: technical authenticity, plus a depth of dimension that spotlights each car design in bold relief against the shining silver background of the ingot. The tiny details that distinguish one historic car from all others are depicted with precision and accuracy. You can actually count the spokes on the wheels.

A CUSTOM-BUILT COLLECTOR'S CHEST

To house this magnificent collection, a custombuilt Collector's Chest will be sent to each subscriber at no charge. The strapping across the top of this chest recalls the hood straps of vintage cars. Its interior finish is reminiscent of leather upholstered seats. The top and front panels can be opened—revealing four ingot trays which can be removed from the chest to make individual wall mountings. And the subscriber's name will be engraved on a solid brass nameplate to certify that he is the owner of this historic collection.

ISSUE PRICE GUARANTEED

Two ingots will be issued each month for 50 months, beginning in May 1974. The issue price will be $17.50 per ingot—$35.00 per month. And, though the complete collection will contain 100,000 grains—more than 200 troy ounces—of solid sterling silver, this issue price will be guaranteed for the length of the series, no matter how high the cost of silver may rise on the world's precious metal markets.

In view of recent increases in the market price of silver—and the strong likelihood of further increases in the years to come—this is an extremely significant guarantee.

SUBSCRIPTION DEADLINE: APRIL 30, 1974

The Centennial Car Ingot Collection is a unique and authoritative commemoration of one hundred years of fascinating history. Whether you are a collector who loves beauty in silver... an individual who is intrigued by the great achievements of mankind... or a devoted and knowledgeable car buff... you will be proud to own and display this magnificent collection.

But in order to subscribe you must act by April 30. The Franklin Mint must decline and return any subscription applications postmarked after that date.

At this day care center, no one knows who has more fun, the high schoolers like Nora McKeown who staff it or the children, like Karen Brewer.

These Students Are Learning To Be Good Parents

by John G. Rogers

never dreamed," says Jerry Naunheim, a high school senior, "that 4- and 5-year-old kids could teach me so many things I didn't know before. They've been a real eye-opener. I'm years away from having kids of my own but these little boys and girls in our project have put me up against all kinds of decisions that a real father would have to make."

Brenda Heine, 16, a junior, has similar thoughts: "Do you know what those little children have done for me? They've sort of reorganized my whole approach. I have a completely new understanding of the kinds of problems that a mother faces in raising her kids."

Those words from Jerry and Brenda—students at McCluer North High School in this St. Louis suburb—attest to the success of an imaginative program supported by the federal government and designed to give teen-agers some notion of the often difficult role of parenthood.

The high school students—so far the steadily expanding project, begun around a year ago, is established in well over 200 communities from coast to coast—are put in the responsible position of operating day care centers for youngsters aged 2 to 6. PARADE recently looked in on the McCluer program to see how it was progressing.

"There are several standards by which you can judge this endeavor," says Sally Glassberg, one of the project coordinators. "We began as something of an experiment but today we have long waiting lists of both teen-agers and little kids anxious to get into the project. Parents without exception are extremely enthusiastic about what we're doing.

"We have instances of teen-agers who were on the verge of dropping out of school but turned around full scale and became enthusiastic students when they got the chance to take part in our living workshop. And other day care centers in the St. Louis area, operated by churches and various institutions, are constantly asking us if they can enlist some of our teen-agers to help them."

Only time will tell

The real test, of course, comes in the future: Will the boys and girls in the program all across the nation be better parents when the time comes?

"I'm pretty sure I will be," says Steve Cooper, a sophomore. "Almost every day I learn something new about these little jokers' moods and emotions and how you have to adjust to bring out the best in them. This one is hungry for praise. That one is self-sufficient and wants to be on his own. And I learn things about myself, too. The need to develop patience, for example. You simply can't work with little kids if you don't have patience. And that same patience should be useful in most any other part of life."

Pretty Debbie Haney, a 17-year-old senior, tells you: "What we're learning you couldn't possibly learn out of books. We're working with flesh and blood—that's what the world's made up of. I know that someday when I'm married and have children, I'll draw on this experience that I'm having now. My kids won't be experiments. I'm having the experiments now and learning how to handle them."

The Office of Education and the Office of Child Development—both agencies of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare—are the prime movers behind the training of future moms and pops. They supply such materials as films and curricula and guidelines, but most schools add their own variations.

Four day care centers

McCluer North has about 50 teenagers—a fourth of them boys—operating four day care centers for some 200 children whose parents pay a nominal fee for the service. Each high school student works four days a week, two hours a day, and receives academic credit in social studies. The students also carry a normal load of conventional education.

But they just love the day care work. Watch them at one of the centers and from their expressions it's hard to tell who's having the most fun—the big kids or the little ones. You see high school boys and girls reading to intense little groups. The activities are manifold. Magnificent, messy finger painting. Singing. Building with blocks. Making pizza on a little stove. Just talking. Playing doctor by putting bandages on pretend injuries. Observing small animals such as hamsters. And through it all understanding between the two age groups grows steadily.

We attended seminars of McCluer day care students at which they traded thoughts about their experiences in the program. They agreed unanimously that patience and discipline are their main problems.

A case of a camera

Says Jerry Naunheim: "When you work with small children you never know what will happen next. Most of the time, they're very good, especially if you keep them interested. Still, one day I happened to have my camera with me in class. One little boy wanted to grab it and kick it around. I told him no. He still tried to grab it. Over and over I told him he couldn't have it. Then he began to kick me and tried to bite me. You can imagine how mad I got. But we try to learn a lesson from everything-in this case it was the frustration of being denied something that was very much wanted. Unreasonably wanted, but still wanted."

Youngsters flock around Dan O'Shea when he says, "I'll read you a story."

"We never hit a child," says Patricia Forristal, 17, a senior, "and I think that a good rule, although I must admit that I believe sometimes they deserve it. The most you should do is grasp them pretty firmly by the shoulders so that you can have an eye-to-eye talk and make them listen. But moments like that happen only occasionally. Most of the time it's fun and enjoyment on both sides. I just love to see little kids laughing"

Dan O'Shea, 18, a burly football player, advocates what he calls the "back room treatment" when discipline is necessary. "You just separate the kid from the rest of the gang," says he. "Put him away around the corner, away from all the fun and he'll tell you pretty fast that he's ready to be good and stop rocking the boat."

Some of the reasons why teen-agers must learn to comprehend the rudiments of children's emotional, physical and psychological needs can be seen in certain marital statistics. Youth marriages have become commonplace in the United States, but the teen-age divorce rate is three times the national average. Every year more than 200,000 girls of 17 and under give birth. Most of them have little understanding of the role of parent.

More mature behavior

But the McCluer teen-agers find that their self-confidence in handling children is developing constantly and also that their relations with their own parents are improving. "Communications are better," says one student. "You can't rush home all excited and tell your mother and father that you scored well in geometry. That's no fun. But all three of us are interested when I tell them some unusual experience with a little kid."

A number of parents have commented that their sons and daughters operating the day care centers have become much more responsible and friendly at home in their relationships with their younger brothers and sisters. "My 16-year-old son used to call them little brats," says one mother, "and he meant it. Now he is more than tolerant and he tells me that he has learned to live with bedlam." Then there's the other side of the coin. Some teen-agers have decided, after a stretch of day care work, that they never want any children of their own. "But that's a plus, too," says Sally Glassberg. "Better not to be a parent than to be an uninterested one."

Steve Cooper plays with Jason McLemore. Says Cooper: "I'm pretty sure I'll be a better parent for having worked here."

Kids are better behaved if they like the story he reads them, says Jerry Naunheim.

PARADE encountered several mothers who give credit to the day care program for keeping their sons in school—in one case even returning to school after dropping out. "There's something so human about the project that it catches their interest completely," reports one mother. "I used to have to practically kick my boy out of bed in the morning to get him started to school. Now he's on the first shift at the day care center and he's always way ahead of me—up early and off to school. I can't remember when he was as enthusiastic about anything as he is about those little kids. And, there seems to be a contagion about it. Since he started the day care work he does better in all his classes. I've heard other parents say the same thing."

Then there is the case of the mother of five children whose oldest daughter serves in one of the day care centers. "Do you know what she does now?" says the mother. "She comes home and tells me how to raise kids."

Do you suffer from painful elimination?

First of all, you should know that you are not alone. Thousands of people experience painful elimination. What's needed is something that will soften intestinal waste for smooth, comfortable relief.

And that's exactly what Serutan does. Serutan is a softening laxative that helps relieve painful elimination. It forms a smooth, mild gel that supplies moisture and bulk to bring effective relief without strain or irritation. This is especially important to people who suffer from hemorrhoids.

Serutan is the same formula as the laxative prescribed by many doctors to give their patients the relief they want with real comfort.

Do you suffer from painful elimination? Try the Serutan way to gentle regularity. Soon you should discover that elimination can be as smooth, easy and comfortable as nature intended.

Keeping Up...With Youth

by Pamela Swift

JAGGER AND FAITHFULL IN 1967

Life With the Stones

Actress Marianne Faithfull's experience with the Rolling Stones constitutes an object lesson for every "groupie," every "teeny-bopper" who imagines that life with the rock 'n' rollers is fascinating, groovy, and an endless ball.

In an interview with the New Musical Express which made headlines in the British press, Marianne, 27, reveals that when she was 16 she wanted to become an actress and a scholar in that order.

"My first move," she explains, "was to get a Rolling Stone as a boyfriend. I slept with three of them and then decided the lead singer (Mick Jagger) was the best bet."

Marianne, a former convent girl and daughter of an Austrian baroness, recently starred in a play, "The Collector," and then announced her engagement to Oliver Musker, an antiques dealer, who was most understanding about her confession. "Ten years ago," she said, "everyone had a good time. I did, too."

Marianne's past, however, wasn't quite so joyful. The first time she met the Rolling Stones, she recalls, "I thought they were awful—the sort of people you idolize from a distance. When you meet them, they're really a disappointment . . . horrible people, dirty, smelly, spotty people."

Marianne's first real love was for Stone Keith Richard, but then she managed to transfer her affection to Jagger. Subsequently she went to drugs, and Jagger wrote songs about her hallucinations and general misery. "It made me mad," she says, "and the only way I could see out of it was for him or me to die."

In Australia she swallowed 150 sleeping tablets but was saved. "I must have been a nightmare to live with," she concedes. "Poor Mick. Anyway I'm OK now. I don't take handfuls of pills every night. I haven't touched heroin for 17 months."

Marianne's successor with the Stones is Anita Pallenberg, the German actress, who became girlfriend to Keith Richard. Last October she and Richard were given suspended sentences for conducting drug orgies in their French

MARIANNE FAITHFULL TODAY

Riviera villa. They appealed the sentence, but the appeals court at Aix-en-Provence stiffened their sentence and banned them from France until 1976.

Cheaper via Canada

Young tourists who plan to hit Europe this summer have learned that in many cases they can save money by departing from Canada.

The United States abolished transatlantic youth fares at the start of this year, but Canada has not. Thus, at this writing, anyone, 12 to 23, can fly from Montreal to Paris, round trip for either $289 or $321 on such scheduled airlines as Air Canada, Air France, and CP Air.

Tickets must be purchased in Canada but are valid for one year, which is a much better deal than the 22-45 day excursion tickets young people can buy in this country.

U.S. domestic youth fares will be abolished by June 1, 1974, which is why many kids are now using them to fly to Canada to purchase transatlantic tickets for this summer's use.

Flying to Canada to buy a transatlantic youth fare ticket is still less costly in many cases than buying a regular economy ticket, say, from Chicago to Paris. Canada is planning to continue its youth fare campaign all through this year.

The Morality of Politics

Politicians may be getting younger. They may decry the traditional system of raising campaign funds, but even the reformers fall victim to it.

Take Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr., 35, whose father used to be Governor of California. Young Brown, Secretary of State, is seeking the Democratic Gubernatorial nomination. At the University of California some weeks ago he urged students to support a United Farm Workers union boycott of the Gallo wineries.

Following Brown's exhortation, a student asked Brown if it were true that he had been sent and had accepted a substantial campaign contribution from the Gallo family.

"It's true," Brown replied. "It would not be a viable campaign strategy to reject a contribution from someone just because you disagree with them."

Helps Shrink Swelling Of Hemorrhoidal Tissues Caused By Inflammation And Infection

Also Gives Prompt, Temporary Relief in Many Cases from Pain and Burning Itch in Such Tissues.

There's an exclusive formulation which actually helps shrink the painful swelling of hemorrhoidal tissues caused by infection. In many cases the first applications give prompt, temporary relief from itching and pain in hemorrhoidal tissues.

The sufferer first notices relief from such painful discomfort. Then this medication helps to gently reduce swelling of hemorrhoidal tissues. Tests conducted by doctors on hundreds of patients in New York City, Washington, D.C., and at a Midwest Medical Center showed this to be true in many cases.

The medication used by doctors in these tests was Preparation H⁽⁵⁾—the same exclusive formula you can buy at any drug counter without a prescription. Preparation H also lubricates the affected area to protect the inflamed, irritated surface and so helps make regularity more comfortable.

There is no other formula like Preparation H. In ointment or suppository form.

HELPS 4 OUT OF 5 QUIT SMOKING!

"of all the leading smoking deterrents only Bantron has stood the test of time

Most likely that smoking deterrent you tried and didn't get any help from isn't in your drug store any more. But Bantron® is. It has been there for over twenty years...helped thousands quit smoking. In actual clinical tests among smokers who wanted to quit 4 out of 5 (83 percent) did so easily and pleasantly in 5 to 7 days with its help. Bantron is not habit forming and does not affect the taste in any way. This little pill simply acts as a substitute for the nicotine in your system, thus curbing your desire to smoke. Don't be discouraged if other smoking deterrents have failed you. Try Bantron, the clinical tests prove it works. You can get it at any drug store.

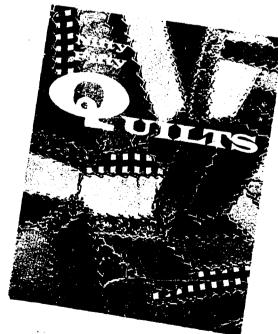

making pieced and appliquéd quilts has been a popular pastime. Patchwork quilts were the Colonial woman's expression of creativity—and they kept her family warm and made her house look bright and cheerful.

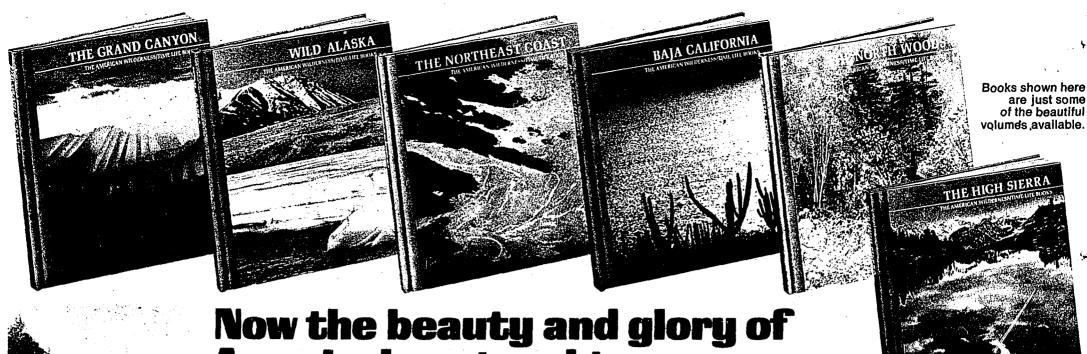

Now, quilts are once again enjoying national popularity, with many antiques winning praise and fetching high prices in museums and galleries. If you've been admiring such quilts and would like to make one of your own, here's your chance: PARADE's latest book, Nifty Fifty Quilts, is on sale to our readers for $1.

This information-packed book guides you through all of the basic quilt-making steps: tracing and cutting patches, making and joining blocks, interlining and lining. Fifty lovely quilt patterns follow; many of them—like the "Windmill," "Clamshell," and "Crazy" quilts—are the very same designs that early American women used.

The patchwork quilt remains the best expression of American folk art. Send today for your copy of Nifty Fifty Quilts—and take part in the quilt-making revival with a relaxing hobby. At $1, it's one of the best book bargains ever.

TO GROEF. Send $1 in cash, check or money order for each copy of "Nifty Fifty Quilts," plus 25¢ postage and handling to: PARADE, Box 144, Old Chelsea Station, New York, N.Y. 10011. Print name, address and zip code clearly. Allow three weeks for delivery.

ccording to Sylvia Porter, the most widely read financial advice columnist in the country, American taxpayers, aware that their politicians have exploited gimmicks and loopholes in the tax laws, are trying to do the same.

"The general attitude of the public," Miss Porter declares, "is one of anger and 'I'm going to try it, too.'

"People see no reason," she adds, "why the majority of Americans should be suckers and a handful of smart guys should get away with murder. And I agree with them."

Consequently, in an annual series of tax tips, Miss Porter tells her 31 million readers how they too can save on taxes.

In addition to dispensing tax advice, Sylvia Porter at 60 is a specialist in U.S. government finance and fiscal policy. "Currently," she states, "we are undergoing a nightmare, a period of murderous inflation and increasing unemployment. In my opinion there is a danger of a real business decline, not just a mild setback.

How Your Horoscope Can Bring You Wealth, Love, Success And Happiness.

by NORMAN P. KENNEDY

Did you know your horoscope could mean the difference between happiness or sorrow; between success or failure?

Picture a long room with doors at each end. In this room there is money, attractive persons of the opposite sex, books that tell you the secret of happiness and many other valuable articles. But, also in this room are bottomless pits, traps, hostile persons and dangerous beasts chained in various places around the room. You must walk through this room, but you may take out of it anything you can.

Now if you had a choice, would you choose to 1) go through the room blindfolded or 2) go through the room with your eyes open and with written instructions on which places an and needs to visit or avoid.

and people to visit or avoid.

Of course, all of us would pick the second choice in a case such as this. Isn't it ridiculous, then, that we would choose to go thru life, the same situation, blindfolded! Even when there is a means to go thru life with a map and our eyes wide open! The means provided is Astrology. The map is our astrological horoscope.

How does it work? Nature's cosmos imprints each of us at the time of birth - when the umbilical cord is cut. We then become ourselves. Until the cord is cut, we are part of our mother. Why or how we presently do not know. The movement of the large solar bodies then times potentials for events in our lives. Astrology does not cause events but is timing of events. But, it's not fortune telling. It's a prediction of potentials which free will can override.

Here is a common misconception about astrology. Some people say, "how can stars millions of light years away be related to our lives." The error here is the word stars. Astrology deals with the relationship of our lives with the sun, moon, and planets—not stars.

And, anyone who doesn't think that the sun, moon, and planets do not regulate earth and its inhabitants, had better think again. We all know how the moon controls the tides. We have all heard of the famous clam experiments where the clams open and close by the cycle of the moon, sun, and planets. Police departments and insurance companies show exact relations with crime and violence with cycles of the moon, sun and planets. Doctors are finding direct relationships with successful operations and the cycle of the solar bodies. Authenticated research is now proving that astrology can predict natural disasters, wars, diseases a person will suffer, personalities of people and much more.

What does a natal horoscope analysis by a qualified astrologer contain? A natal horoscope analysis contains the best psychological analysis of yourself that you can get today. Because, in a controlled experiment in 1960, astrologers beat psychologists in predicting case histories.

In addition, a natal horoscope analysis includes discussions on the following: financial outlook; taxes and inheritances; early home environment; relationships with family; relatives and parents; lovelife and marriage; children; career and occupation; hopes; wishes and goals; and subconscious attitudes. In a major analysis, a one year forecast is also included.

Many people think that astrology only appeals to "way out" unscientific people. Nothing could be farther from the truth. In fact, studies show that astrology appeals most to intelligent and logical people.

Consider these famous scientists: Galileo-astronomer, Carl Jung-psychologist, Johannes Kepler-astronomer, Roger Bacon-mathemeti-cian, Tycho Bache-astronomer. Want to know what they all had in common? They all were astrologers themselves or used astrology in their work. Even Albert Einstein was impressed by the accuracy of astrology when he studied it in his late years.

Astrology appeals to people in every walk of life. A horoscope has meant the difference between success and disaster for famous people throughout history. Your horoscope can mean the same to you.

Your horoscope can help you be in the right

Did you know that the three wise men who found the Christ Child were astrologers? The "large star" which guided them to the Christ Child was really a cluster of cosmic bodies which were astrological charter. which were, as predicted by astrological charts, in line at that particular time. This was the reason it was so bright. This alignment of bodies allowed the wise men to know the time and place of the birth of Christ. Also, Christ chose His 12 apostles according to the 12 astrological signs.

Did you know that astrology helped the allies win W.W. II? The allies employed astrologers. The axis powers started out employing astrologers. But, this was ceased early when the famous astrologer, Karl Ernst Krafft, predicted the exact time and place of an attempt on Hitler's life in 1939. Hitler thought the astrologers were conspiring against him, so they were imprisoned.

This proved to be a tragic decision for Hitler. A decision that may have altered the course of the war. Because, if Hitler had studied his horoscope, he would have used different strategy Why? Because two horoscopes, one of Adolf Hitler, drawn by two different astrologers, in two different countries, at two different times exactly predicted the course of W.W. II.

Hitler did get to see these horoscopes too late. He read them in the last hours of the war as Berlin burned around him. The following is an authentic account of the incident. Here is a direct quote from THE RISE AND FALL OF THE THIRD REICH, by William L.

"They sent for two horoscopes, which were kept in the files of one of Himmler's multitudinous "research" offices. One was the horoscope of the Fuehrer drawn up on January 30, 1933, the day he took office; the other was the horoscope of the Weimer

It is estimated that over 90% of rich and famous people use astrologers. This includes political leaders, film stars, businessmen and scientists. Natal horoscopes of Grace Kelly and frince Rainier (pictured above) predicted their famous marriage. They both came to America recently to have their current horoscopes done by astrologer Keith Clayton.

Republic, composed by some unknown astrologer on November 9, 1918, the day of the Republic's birth. Goebbles communication of the second of th ted the results of the re-examination of these two remarkable documents to Krosigk.

An amazing fact has become evident, both horoscopes predicted the outbreak of the war in 1939, the victories until 1941, and the subsequent series of reversals, with the hardest blows during the first months of 1945, particularly during the first half of April.* In the second half of April, we were to experience a temporary success. Then there would be stagnation until August and peace that same month. For the following three years, Germany would have a hard time, but starting in 1948, she would rise again."
*Hitler committed suicide in April, 1945.

On the other hand, astrologers aided the allies in forecasting the axies moves. The most famous astrologer, Louis de Wohl, employed by British government, predicted the exact events leading to the downfall of Mussolini. He gained the faith of the American military when he are the faith of the American military when he pre-dicted Pearl Harbor a year before it happened.

More on avoiding disaster, came these stories from a recent article in the Miami Herald newspaper. The article tells the story of Mary Kelly, a Miami computer programmer, who heeded the advice of her horoscope which warned her of a wrong medical diagnosis. She avoided an unnecessary operation that would have left her a cripple have left her a cripple.

With President Johnson, who in 1965 offered her the presidency of the Export-Import Bank. She recalls how she wept when for personal reasons she refused. Photo is inscribed: "To Sylvia with affection and appreciation L.B.J."

"I have never seen the undersecretaries in Washington, which is where the brains are, suffer so from a lack of imagination and policy direction. They've no feeling of being in control. I, however, am an economic optimist, and I think we'll muddle through. But boy! We are really muddling."

Since 1947 when her column was first syndicated, Sylvia Porter, tall, trim, and well-tailored, has reputedly developed into the plain-speaking guide of more stock market investors, home-improvers, and ordinary consumers than any other financial writer. Or so at least the Publishers-Hall Syndicate claims. Her talent for translating complex terms into simple language that the ordinary citizen can understand has made her one of the most powerful and wealthiest newspaperwomen in the nation.

In 402 papers

Her five-times-a-week column appears in 402 newspapers reaching into every state and five foreign countries. Each year she publishes a paperback guide to paying income tax, and every month the Ladies' Home Journal runs a question and answer column under her byline. With the help of her second husband, 70-year-old G. Sumner Collins, promotion director for the Hearst newspapers, and two other journalists, she turns out a weekly bond newsletter. The result of her diligence is an income of about $100,000 a year.

Although some financial experts view

Miss Porter's approach to economics as superficial and tag her "The Dear Abby of the Business Section," her pronouncements carry weight in government circles.

In the mid-60's her columns were credited with influencing the passage of both the truth-in-packaging and the truth-in-lending bills. Aware of her clout, President Kennedy invited her to join his first consumer advisory council. "I quit," she says, "after listening with growing consternation to this glittering power group argue for two hours about whether our stationery should have our names running along the margin or across the top."

Johnson's offer

In 1965 President Lyndon Johnson offered her the presidency of the Export-Import Bank. Recalling Johnson's proposal, she relates, "My husband and I had just arrived in Acapulco for a vacation. I was awakened at 8 a.m. by a telephone call from the White House. President Johnson got on and said he'd like me to take the job. With tears flowing down my cheeks, I sat on the edge of the bed and said, 'Mr. President, I must refuse. In the first place, you can take a leave of absence from a corporation or a university and go back. But you cannot take a leave of absence from a column. Many people will come in and fill the vacuum. There will be nothing for me to return to. Second, Mr. President, I'm married and my husband's office is in New York. My daughter (Cris now 24) is still at home, and I cannot move into Washington life, nor can I ask my husband to quit his job and follow me.'

"Johnson said that he'd have my husband transferred. I replied, Oh no you won't, Mr. President.' Then I got off the phone. I cried for the next hour and had a Bloody Mary, something which I'd never done at that hour of the morning before."

Wedded to journalism

While Miss Porter has thought seriously of entering government service, she doesn't regret remaining wedded to journalism.

"I think I'm one of the luckiest women I've ever met," she explains. "I get up in the morning, and I'm looking forward to work. I'm not bored. I'm not worried about growing older as many women my age are. Hell, I'm having a ball. I feel like a teacher and there's a lot of satisfaction in this role."

The columnist's dedication to education and guiding the consumer is shared by her 40-year-old associate, Lydia Ratcliffe, who calls herself "Sylvia's staff of 12 rolled into one." Miss Ratcliffe lives in an old, remote farmhouse outside Chester, Vt. She cooks on a 1905 wood-burning stove, raises vegetables and shelters a mongrel dog and a number of stray cats. Since 1963 when she stopped working as a researcher and reporter for Time magazine, she has been contributing sizably to Miss Porter's output. Her fields of interest include welfare reform, health care, anti-poverty work, and consumer protection.

Her life style differs greatly from that of her boss who occupies a 10-room apartment on Manhattan's Fifth Avenue and a 31-acre estate in Pound Ridge, N.Y.

Sylvia Feldman, whose parents emigrated from Russia, was 12 when her physician-father died. During her freshman year at New York City's Hunter College, the stock market crash wiped out the $30,000 which her mother, a milliner, had invested. Awed and intrigued by "how so much money could just disappear," Sylvia dropped her plans to become a novelist and switched to economics.

Married at 18

She earned a Phi Beta Kappa key in her junior year and graduated Magna Cum Laude. At 18 she married financier Reed Porter. After 10 years of marriage they were divorced in 1941. She has kept his name for professional purposes, but in 1943 she married G. Sumner Collins.

After working briefly as an Arthur Murray dance instructor, Sylvia moved from one brokerage and bond firm to another. With the experience she accumulated on Wall Street, she began free-lancing for financial publications.

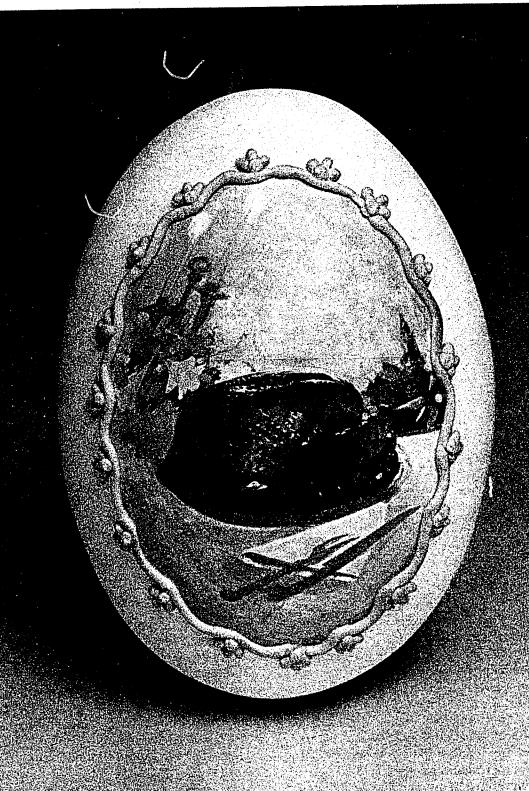

In 1935 she tried to land a full-time job as a financial writer, but neither the New York dailies nor the wire services were ready to accept a woman economics expert. Finally the New York Post agreed to pay her $10 a columnity providing she wrote under the neuter byline S.F. Porter. Her editors at the Post feared their readers wouldn't trust a woman's financial advice.

Quickly she swamped the Post with so much copy that management realized it would be cheaper to hire her full time. In 1942 the Post began to print her column regularly, signed Sylvia Porter.

Successful formula

While her early work depended heavily on complex economic analyses, she gradually evolved into everyman's financial adviser. One indicator of the success of her formula is the number of journalists who have tried to imitate her. "We'd like to have a column as successful as hers," remarked an executive at The New York Times, "but we haven't come up with one yet."

Sylvia doesn't fear competition. "The daily press doesn't tell the news the same way I do," she explains, "and they're not reaching the same people. I'm speaking to the little guy—the average Joe and Joan—but I'm also reaching the leaders in cities throughout the country. Let's face it. There's no other game in town. No one has come up with my particular touch. And I have no intention of giving up my column until the day I die."

Actress Fran Sternhagen and son Peter unwrap some cabbage rolls.

ACTRESS' FAVORITE RO

by beth merriman

Stuffed cabbage is a popular dish that originated in Europe; its hearty flavor makes it an impressive main dish or a hot appetizer. There are many variations on the basic recipe—ground meat, rice and cooked cabbage leaves—and one of the most imaginative versions is a favorite of actress Fran Sternhagen.

Her Sweet-and-Sour Cabbage Rolls have a touch of the Orient in their subtle, gingery sauce. Cooked in oven wrap, they save the busy cook some clean-up time. Ms. Sternhagen, now appearing in the Broadway show "The Good Doctor," has little time for elaborate cooking, and finds this dish a pleasant change from routine fare.

Her six kids, she claims, also approve: "It's one of the few grown-up dishes that's a real treat for them, too." She advises making two batches at once and freezing one for future use.

sweet-and-sour cabbage rolls 1 medium onion, sliced

1 medium head cabbage

1 tablespoon flour

1 cup raisins, divided

1 pound ground beef

1½ cups cooked rice

1 teaspoon salt 1/4 teaspoon pepper

2 tablespoons grated onion

½ cup water 2 tablespoons lemon juice

1 bay leaf

2 tablespoons brown sugar

2 tablespoons vegetable oil

1 can (16 oz.) Italian-style tomatoes

1/4 cup crushed ginger snaps

Plunge cabbage into large kettle of boiling salted water; cook 10 minutes. Drain. Carefully separate 12 outer leaves, trimming away cores. Shred remain-

Use enough foil-edged plastic wrap to line a large kettle or deep roasting pan, leaving enough for 3-inch overlap. Dust wrap with flour. Combine half the raisins with beef, rice, grated onion, salt and pepper. Roll up about 1/4 cup mixture in each cabbage leaf, tucking in ends to secure. Layer shredded cabbage and sliced onion on wrap; place cabbage rolls on top. Sprinkle with remaining raisins. Add tomatoes and bay leaf. Combine remaining ingredients

To cook on top of range: Double-fold wrap and foil edges to make a secure package. Add boiling water to reach halfway up package. Cover; boil slowly two hours. Add more water as needed to maintain level.

To bake: Pierce top of wrap with fork six times. Bake at 400 degrees for about 11/2 hours. Let package stand for a few minutes before unwrapping. Makes four to six servings. TESTED IN PARADE'S KITCHEN

freezer tips

- Cooked chicken, turkey or meat casseroles that include vegetables will freeze well. Top them with flaky pastry.
- Bake several meat loaves at a time. Serve one and freeze the others. If you do not have enough pans just shape the loaves and bake them in shallow roasting pans. If baking loaves in pans, cool them before removing from pans and freezing.
- Thaw frozen meat or poultry in the refrigerator instead of at room temperature; cook as soon as thawed. Follow label instructions for cooking and storing and refrigerate leftovers immediately after the meal.
- Cooked dried beans freeze especially well, because freezing softens the beans somewhat. Cook them until just barely tender before freezing for the best results.

RHUBARD!

Rhubarb—used as a medicine by the ancient Chinese—is not a fruit, but a vegetable. It makes a delicious accompaniment to many meat and poultry dishes. Cooked and sweetened rhubarb freezes well, so put away a few containers while the brief season for fresh rhubarb lasts.

VEGETABLE Guide

- Use a dash of imagination in preparing vegetables. Create new and interesting flavor by adding herbs or spices—but add them with discretion. For a "rule of thumb," try 1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon of dried herbs or spices for each 2 cups of vegetables.
- When vegetable tissues are bruised Vitamins A and C are depleted. Be sure your knife blades are sharp when trimming, cutting or shredding fresh vegetables.
- The leafy tops of young beets and turnips—like kale, spinach, mustard greens and collards—are inexpensive sources of Vitamin A as well as other vitamins and iron.
- Potatoes are no longer an inexpensive food. During the season for new potatoes, when prices are lower, plan to use them in frozen dishes. Mature or "old" potatoes tend to disintegrate or become watery when cooked and then frozen.

CADDAGE PATCH

Cabbage is a vegetable for all seasons and is always a "good buy" because it is a source of Vitamin C. It also is low in calories: 1/2 cup of shredded cabbage contains only 10 calories, while a 41/2-inch wedge contains 25 calories. Shredded cabbage should not be left exposed to the air. Cabbage keeps best in a refrigerator at about 32 degrees.

RICE COOKERY

Rice continues to be in short supply, and a strong demand for rice continues to drive its price up. Medium-grain white rice and the more expensive longgrain variety have the same nutritional composition but differ in cooking quality. Long-grain rice kernels tend to remain apart when cooked, while the shorter-grain kernels tend to cling together. The former is best for serving as a side dish, the latter for puddings, casseroles or molded dishes.

pickle History

Egyptians enjoyed pickles, and Plutarch wrote that the Romans used them. Pickles were well-known in Europe by the 16th century, and at the end of this era recipes for making pickles began appearing in cookbooks. The first picklepacking plants appeared around 1820.

There are over 36 types of pickles, most of which belong to one of four groups—dill, sour, sweet and fresh-packed.

Almost everyone at the corral today has a gimmick. Find the one who doesn't. 1. No. He's Brandon Kowz. Gimmick: Rides tall in the saddle (ever since he sat on a branding iron). Smokes "Quick Draw" cigarettes—one draw and the taste is shot. 2. No. He's Sid E. Slicker. Outfit is his gimmick: He looks like something that fell off a wedding cake. 3. No. She's May Aiken Bach. Buys every camping gimmick made. Even her horse opens up into a sofa. Tried an orange-flavor cigarette, but didn't know whether to smoke it—or squeeze it into her drink. 4. Nope. He's Harry Decamp Kunsler. Wears gimmick on back, especially during hunting season. Was later attacked by a moose—who couldn't read. 5. Right. He goes back to nature to get away from the fads and gimmicks. Likes his cigarettes natural and honest, too. Camel Filters. No nonsense. All flavor. 6. No. He's Tim Berwulf. Gimmick: "Expert" tracker. He once followed tracks into a cave—and shot a train.

my favorite jokes

by bob HAGAN

EDITOR'S NOTE: There are situations in life that can propel a person into comedy. Bob Hagan started doing comedy after his family grew to 10 in number. He used his already extensive experience as a father and businessman as the basis for his humor, and then started adding political commentary when he served as a county officer in Ohio (he lives in North Madison).

Hagan has written for comedian Danny Thomas as well as for a number of political figures including Sargent Shriver. He's appeared on the Mike Douglas and Bill Dana shows, hosted his own TV show in Cleveland, and performed at clubs and hotels, among them: the Fontainebleau, Miami Beach; the Hacienda, Las Vegas; Cobo Hall, Detroit; and the Pittsburgh Hilton. Here are some of his jokes and comments:

I didn't take the gas and oil shortage seriously until I saw an attendant lubricate my car with peanut butter.

With the oil shortage Dean Martin's combs are worth a fortune.

You can't beat American technology. They've developed automobiles that go 140 miles an hour, and bumpers that can withstand an impact of five miles per hour. I guess if you're going to have an accident, you slow down to five mph and look for a brick wall.

Danny Thomas is so proud of his Lebanese ancestry that he had a Cadillac built with two humps in the roof.

I'd feel more comfortable if I thought the Supreme Court knew what prurient interest is instead of trying to remember what it was.

Country and Western songs are very moving. They're the stories of love affairs coming or going—but never here right now.

Inflation has hit the churches too. In the raffle at our parish a Cadillac is second prize. First prize is a rib roast.

When I was hosting a television show in Cleveland, I was admonished by a very young director about my interviews, which he said were not direct enough. Applying an unaccustomed zeal, I went home and watched the real pros. Subsequently, I mentioned to the director that Hugh Downs' interviews were anything but direct. My youthful director said, "Yeah, he has a problem."

On the same show the producer brought on a guest who advocated the tuning of all pianos to an "A" of 444 vibrations per second, instead of the present 440 vibrations. When he demonstrated the difference with a tuning fork, I attempted to be clever by saying, "I counted only 395 vibrations." To this day I can't tell whether he was putting me on when he said, "No one can count that fast."

I'm relieved now that we have an answer to the song, "Where Have All The Flowers Gone?"— Euell Gibbons ate them.

We can now expect a new chain of fast food restaurants—shaped like hickory nuts, with customers sitting on mushroom stools, eating a "Big Euell" —a quarter pound of mulberry mulch with pine cone garnish!

I admire Zsa Zsa Gabor because she maintains a friendly relationship with all her ex-husbands, and they all visit her. The ones with even number license plates—on even number days.

Where I buy my gasoline, the guy not only has raised the prices, but he's making me bring back the dishes he used to give me on the fill-ups.

I've been lucky. Through Danny Thomas I have received a credit card good for a fill-up at any service station that sells Arab oil—as long as I'm driving a camel.

We shouldn't think too harshly of the Arab countries—where do you think we got the idea for the mobile home?

Comedians know they've made the big time when they become an honorary national chairman of an effort to wipe out a major disease. Currently I am heading a regional campaign against excessive earwax.

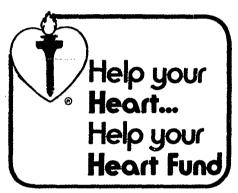

Streaking (running in a group nude across campus) is the newest college fad. We've come a long way culturally. It's remarkable that you can get an education running around nude, but can't get a cup of coffee in a restaurant if you're barefooted.

Famed Owner Of Kroch's Brentano's To Leave Area

By HUB KEAVY

LAGUNA BEACH—Papa Kroch's sketch in Who's Who runs a barebones 10 lines. It would require at least 1,000 lines, even in Who's Who's small type, to properly tell the full story of a man who for more than 70 years may have had more influence in the world of books than any other.

Adolph Alfred Kroch is the full name. He is 92. After 22 years in Laguna Beach, to which community he has contributed much culturally and financially, he is moving to a newly built home in Tuscon, Ariz. He will live his remaining years next door to his daughter, Gretchen Kelch.

An example of Kroch's literary weight: many years ago on a European bound ship his baggage was bulging with manuscripts urged on him by publishers. If Kroch was pleased with what he read, publishers did handsprings; if he was negative, they usually didn't print the book.

At this time Kroch's and Brentano's his firm, always ordered one per cent (perhaps 100 copies) of the first printings of most books. Kroch cabled his son to order 1,000 copies of James Jones' "From Here to Eternity." It is literary history that Jones' book was an immense success. In relating this anecdote, a friend says:

"That one incident illustrates what a fine mind he has, both as critic and merchant."

He helped countless authors, not only as critic but as one of the country's biggest booksellers. Many might have disappeared without a ripple of excitement except for Kroch's support. Two examples may be recited. A book by the late Edna St. Vincent Millay, "A Few Figs from Thistles," was gathering dust on a publisher's shelves. Kroch liked it, bought the complete stock—and made it a success. Irving Stone's "Lust for Life" might have been little heard of but for Kroch's enthusiasm.

Papa (he cannot recall who first so called him, nor why) Kroch wants no honors. He shies from personal publicity He'll talk about books and authors "because that's about all I have been doing for more than 70 years."

But a bit of his history: his father was a banker in Vienna and wanted his bookish son (who began reading at age five) to join him in the money marts. Young Adolph hated banking. At 18, with his extensive library, he sailed for New York. A fellow passenger fleeced him of every last dollar. Kroch had to sell his precious books to live. He took off for Chicago because he had heard it was lively and enterprising. He had a few manual jobs for a year or two.

He remembers: "I applied at a book store as a salesman. They said 'What do you know about books?' I said I had been in the business for 10 years. I must have looked a bit older than my 20," he chuckles.

Laguna friends wanted to give him a super Godspeed testimonial banquet, but he begged off. "If you must, only a few, please." On April 1 present and former members of the board of directors of South Coast Community Hospital honored Papa at a small luncheon. Only 40 guests. Kroch was one of a handful who built the hospital and he was its first president. "I worked night and day like hell to get it started," he recalls.

Papa is a rotund little man with a round face, a pate fringed with grey, inquisitive brown eyes. He invariably dresses like a hep youngster. The other day he was wearing a double knit sports coat in a wild bright red and black herringbone pattern, black slacks, an unquiet sports shirt. Outdoors he always wears a commodore's cap, set at a jaunty angle.

IN THE 1920s, LIFE WAS THRILLING AND GAY FOR MOLLY BROWN Before Stock Market Crash She Was Advertising Model 'For Fun'

LIVES IN HUNTINGTON BEACH

Famous Model Recalls Days Of Former Triumphs, Glory

By TED JAMES
Register Staff Writer
HUNTINGTON BEACH—The faded

glitter of 10,000 yesterdays still shines brightly for Molly Brown.

From the gay, mad whirl of pre-Depression Detroit, with its society balls and ermine capes, its banking and railroading magnates, its playboys and its hijinks, Mrs. Alice (Molly) Schaeffer Brown has settled into a tiny home at 9858 Continental Drive here.

As a beautiful brunette in a world of pretty people and exciting events, she used the name of Molly Brown when being photographed for advertising pictures of the first Packard cars. But today, although she is still an attractive 60-plus, Mrs. Brown refuses to have her picture taken and to tell her age. Thumbing through cracked and browned photos of the past when she was in demand for her wit, charm and gaeity, she now claims to be camera-shy.

The stock market crash and the Great Depression caused many changes in Mrs. Brown's life—not all of them good. Her marriage failed. Her family's wealth disappeared. The silver spoon with which she was born tarnished and eventually eroded away.

There followed periods running a modeling studio in Hollywood; a screen test and bit parts in a few minor films; a job as secretary to the head of a major movie studio; and several radio series in which she was known as "Alice In Storyland." She did everything and anything to support her growing family of two daughters and a son.

An old business card dropped from one of her scrapbooks. On it she had listed her services: "advertising copy, editing and typing, phone service, sewing, cut and fit slip covers, baby sit (elderlies, too), and shopping service."

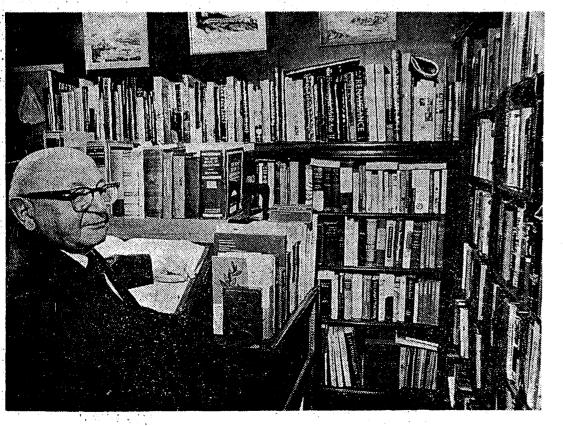

Around her she has gathered remnants of the good life as it once was...a brass filigree picture frame, a musty Indian tapestry, bits of costly porcelain, and framed needlepoints with poems which begin, "How cruel memories are..."

Ever optimistic, Mrs. Brown is preparing for the future. "I am very anxious to get back in stride," she said. "My writing is important. I just got a new typewriter ribbon because I won't start (to write) anything without a new one."

Her conversation leapfrogs from old personal friends—names now famous in industry, manufacturing, banking and railroading, to summers in Atlantic City. social affairs in Carmel and private musicales in Pasadena. She talks about the grand marches at parties, the gay biades who squired her about in their cabriolets, and about her sole companion, a mystical Siamese cat.

Despite the many black strokes life has lodged against her, Mrs. Brown is still cheerful. A recent small investment in a vine-growing device didn't pan out. Another with a literary agent proved profiless

Mrs. Brown is a highly unusual woman, not to be met but to be experienced. She is from another time, another lifestyle. She is, in the end, still Molly Brown who was an advertising model "for the fun of it."

LEGENDARY BOOK MAN BIDS FAREWELL TO COUNTY 'Papa' Adolph Kroch Ponders Choice Of Top Volumes

Persian Rugs Make Unusual Investment

By ANN TERRILL
My daughter calls him "George." He is a beautiful fox fur stole made up in the style of the early 20s, or thereabouts.

"George" is the reason I stay away from auctions.

He hangs there in our cloak closet, soulful eyes, dainty feet, perky ears, bushy tail and all. He seldom gets out of his dark home, as there is no real use for

But caught once in the fever of a hot fur auction in Alaska, I bid $16 on George mainly to prove that I had the guts to bid in what was the first real auction I'd ever attended. Some $50 later, I had a brand new fur piece. They called it a stole in Anchorage and assured me I had the latest style. I don't think the furrier had seen a style book for 40 years. But the fur is a real beauty, anyhow.

So. . . auctions make me uncomforta-

Wealth is matter of relativity, they say. But it still brings out the old competitive spirit to sit in on a meeting where auctioneer and audience are at white heat pitch to drive the price of a given object into the stratosphere where even a Jay Gould might stop to think. I feel inadequate.

But not long ago I got lured into attending an auction in Los Angeles for the reason that I like Oriental rugs. No, I couldn't afford one. But that didn't stop me from mentally squandering my life's savings and home for one luxurious creation.

I wouldn't have needed my home, anyway, because the exotic looking carpet was too big for even my largest room. The only real problem, aside from money, was how to afford an apartment with rooms fit for marble halls. Prices of course, were commensurate for the most part. But there were "bargains," if you can call carpeting at $18 to $20 a foot a bargain. Small rugs, say three by five feet, could be purchased for about $600 to $1,000, and once in awhile for less. The prices were "nearly wholesale," I was told, and maybe they were. There are several sides to the same question according to one authority (see accompanying article in this issue).

The auction was staged by the Iranian Brotherhood of Rug Weavers, one of the largest institutions in the world.

The company will stage its first Orange County auction here at the Disneyland Hotel, April 28. Auctioneer will be Jimmy Burk, young son of noted Los Angeles public relations person Margaret Burk. Burk, working with the Iranian Brotherhood, has in a relatively short time been able to acquire a good reputation. At Mrs. Burk's request, I visited one of Jimmy's auctions and lost my mind over at least three of the rugs. But any one of them would have required a o complete new decor, and a rich uncle to pay for same. So I left the jolly gathering and went home alone.

But Oriental and Persian rugs are today considered one of the best investments that can be made by those interested in getting a hedge against inflation.

The Iranian Brotherhood represents about 96,000 traditional rug weaving families in Iran who sell directly to the Ghermezian brothers, Nader and Rafi. These men give lectures, show movies and exhibit rugs prior to auctions all over the United States and Canada. They have a crusade of sorts. They want to familiarize today's generations with the delights of genuine Oriental and Persian carpentry. The intricately woven and designed rugs enjoyed a great popularity in the 20s. Then they fell out of style. I can recall my mother's decarding of some we had in favor of hand-woven country-style carpets, just entering vogue in the 30s. Those carpets, if she still had them, and if they were in good condition, would be worth many times what they originally cost. But the connoisseur of Oriental carpets and rugs need not hoard his purchase for decades. Rugs bought 10 years ago, if they are good, are worth far more today than they were when first purchased. The trick is to know when one is good. Experts say this is done by turning the rug over and seeing how tightly woven it is. All Oriental rugs that are genuine are handmade, as distinguished from good copies turned out by machine in Belgium, France and other countries. The reason they are so coveted today, and so expensive is because the art of rug weaving is dying out in Iran. This is because young people can make more money working in the oil fields than they can in rug weaving, according to Burk. Economists estimate that Persian rugs increase in value 12 to 15 per cent a year. The Ghermezians guarantee to reimburse a purchaser of any of their rugs at least what they paid if the customer decides to sell his purchase back. There are cases where the Brotherhood pays even more.

Production costs are low, as many weavers live in small towns or are desert nomads who weave rugs in return for produce, livestock, or even parcels of land rather than money.

In the Orient carpets are a man's constant companion. They serve his personal comfort; they adorn the sacred area where he offers his prayers; they decorate his house; they cover his couch; they serve as his saddle; and they provide shelter on the barren plains. It is no wonder that the Oriental folklore and legend oftens begins with a i mysterious individual who gets about via a "magic carpet," his entree into the world of riches, fame, fortune and romance. The Oriental rug has ancient traditions, dating probably from prehistoric times. A knotted rug approximately 2500 years old was found recently during excavations in the Altai Mountains near the border of Mongolia. This rug had been preserved in perpetual ice and as such had been kept in remarkably good condition over the long passage of time. By virtue of its fine knotting and design, the rug has been attributed to Persia and now hangs in the Hermitage Museum in 191

During the Middle Ages, carpets from the Orient brought to Europe an aura of mystery and magnificence. They adorned the walls of churches on holy days and were placed on the steps before the main altars, separating the worshippers from the altars. Canvasses of the great Renaissance painters incorporate rare eastern carpets in a variety of ways. The artist Holbein has lent his name to one such carpet as it appears so often in his pictures.

Only the best quality rugs are sound and A investments. There are numerous kinds of Persian rugs, known by the name of the area in which they are woven. It is very important to know that within each area (such as Kashan, Kerman, etc.) there are also different types according to grade and quality. The finest, most expensive Persian rugs are made of silk. But silk rugs are becoming very rare. So are combinations of silk and wool. Third most coveted rug is the one woven of wool from the chest of a baby sheep. A mohair rug, next in quality is preferable to other types of wool rugs, and a camel's hair is not commonly used at all.

You judge the quality of a Persian rug by the origin, by the number of the knots per square inch, by the clearness and brightness of the back and by the aghtness of the pile.

kind made and hard to find. Time-ANCIENT ART OF RUG-MAKING -

Auctioneer Jim Burk stands beside small replica of Persian loom, rug half-finished, and displays a rare tapestry. He stands on an all-silk Persian carpet, the most expensive

According to the Ghermezians, the finest quality Persian carpets come from the following districts, listed in alphabetical order: Bokhara, Isphahan, Kashan, Kerman, Mood, Nain, Quom, Sarouk, Tabriz, Tehran, Varamin, Afshar, and Yalameh.

Generally, says the Iranian Brother-hood report, lower quality rugs come from the following districts: Gorvan, Bkhtiari, Birjan, Borchelo, Copotrang, Dargezin, Gazvin, Hamedan, Heriz, India, Indo, Joseghan, Khorasan, Kurdistan, Kurdy, Mahal, Meshhad, Mosel, Shiraz, and Shirvan.

If, says the experts, the choice between two rugs of identical origin and name must be made, choose that with clarity of color and brightness on the back, the one with the tighest pile and the one with the most knots per square inch.

Handwoven Oriental rugs commonly contain such things as mistakes made during weaving, slight design imbalances, differences in colors or shade in the pattern, differences in the fringe lengths or in ways of knotting fringes and shading problems. But such, say the Ghermezians, are not flaws and actually enhance the value of the rug.

In the case of unique and special masterpieces, the name of the weaver is known, but these names need not be on the rugs. On the other hand, not every rug that has a name affixed represents an outstanding master weaver. Connoisseurs know the names and can identify the works of master weavers whether or not their names appear on their rugs.

The designation given to rugs such as Queen Bokhara, Palace Kerman, Palace Oriental and Persian Rugs, are the honored art of Persian carpet-making is dying out, as younger generation turn to higher paying jobs in factories, oil fields.

finest group of rugs in the collection of Persian Rug Weavers of Iran and are trade marked by the Iranian Brotherhood of Rug Weavers. Some other designations used by the IBRW, says Gehrmezian, are Imperial Crown and Palace

According to the Brotherhood, the same quality or rugs are being woven today in Iran as they have been through the centuries. In most cases these new rugs, especially those offered in this country, are superior. Weavers, say the experts, are now more sophisticated in their techniques, creating designs, preparing the wool and dyes and they are often more careful in the actual weaving.

Dyes used are natural colors made from such things as rose petals, pistachios, madder, the rind of walnuts, the leaves of vines, the roots of trees and such. Often the wool is dipped in a dye as much as 20 times before it attains the correct delicate tint required. In some cases, for certain shades, the wool is used in its natural color, as in the case of whites, beiges, browns, greys and (Please Turn to Page 27)

New Attraction Set For Summer Opening

Disneyland has announced that final preparations are under way to open a new attraction, "America Sings," in the Park's Carousel Theater this summer?

The 24-minute presentation will be a comical look at our country's musical heritage, presented by more than 100 delightful characters developed through Disney's Audio-Animatronics system.

Hosts for the show will be a fun-lovin' eagle named Sam and his whimsical sidekick, an inquisitive owl.

*Utilizing the Carousel Theater's unique or rotating format, they'll escort guests on a whirlwind tour spanning nearly 200 years of our nation's music.

Four major acts comprising the attraction will take visitors to the South, where a blissful hound dog will be just one of many characters treating the audience to such favorites as "Dixie," "My Old Kentucky Home" and "Camptown Races."

From there, guests will journey on to the Old West to hear a humorous variety of songs including "Workin' On The Railroad" and "Home On The Range" before entering a Gay Nineties setting offering tunes like "Bill Bailey" and "Sweet Adeline."

The show's concluding act will look at 20th Century America. A number of hits such as "Ja-Da," "A Tisket A Tasket," "See Ya Later Alligator," and even a long-legged crane's version of "Shake, Rattle and Roll" will be performed before the grand finale of "Joy To The World."

Two years in the making, this musical adventure will be the second major attraction at Disneyland to be housed in the Carousel Theater.

General Electric's Carousel of Progress enjoyed a highly successful six years in the Theater before closing to Park guests in September, 1973.

The GE show is currently being relocated at Walt Disney World in Floridafor a scheduled Winter, 1974 opening,

Both the development of "America Sings" and the transfer of the Carousel of Progress are being directed by WED Enterprises, the Disney-owned planning and design firm located in Glendale, Calif.

BIRTH OF A NATION

Britain Moves To Cinch Control Over Her Colonies

WEEK OF APRIL 7 - 13

Editor's Note: This is one in a series of weekly columns recalling events in the history of the nation, and of the world, 200, 150 and 100 years ago.

1774—Parliament is involved in noisy sessions, in London, as further measures are debated to secure British control in the American Colonies. The Boston Port Bill, already passed, was the first. Now the discussion relates to court procedures and administrative procedures.

It will require more than a month to reach agreement on two bills, both to be regarded in the Colonies as additional "Intolerable Acts." The population of the Colonies at this time is estimated at 2.6 million, roughly one-fifth of the combined populations of England, Scotland and Wales.

In Germany, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, then 25, published a morbid and sentimental novel, "The Sorrows of Young Werther." Translated, it becomes widely read throughout Europe and also in America, and the basis for a kind of "Wertherism" cult, involving a pessimistic attitude toward life that brings many warnings against its possible ill effects. The book also establishes Goethe as an important literary personality, but with his ultimate reputation resting more upon his poetry than upon his fiction or dramatic writing.

1772 The viceroy of Mexico, Antonio Maria Bucareli y Ursua, sends Don Pedro Fagar, as successor to Gaspar de Portola as governor of Lower California, on an expedition to Monterey, to proceed northward from there to clear San Francisco harbor of "foreign aggressors," meaning Russian and British ships and men moving southward toward New Spain, Traveling overland, the Fagar expedition reaches the San Joaquin River at this time, but is unable to cross and is forced to return to Monterey. Although Portola, in company with Father Junipero Serra, had established missions between San Diego and Monterey, at intervals of a day's journey, in 1769 and 1770, and had explored farther north, it was 1776 before an expedition under Juan Bautista de Anza selected a site for settlement near San Francisco Bay, and it was 1823 before the last of the 21 missions was established as far north as Sonoma.

Emanuel Swedenborg (born Swedberg), dead in London at 84, is buried there at this time. Bor nin Stockholm in 1688 and educated at Uppsala University, son of a Lutheran bishop, he was for 30 years a government mining official. At about 50, however, his interests turned to psychological and theological matters. He wrote extensively, traveled widely in Europe and gained many distinguished converts to his concepts of christianity.

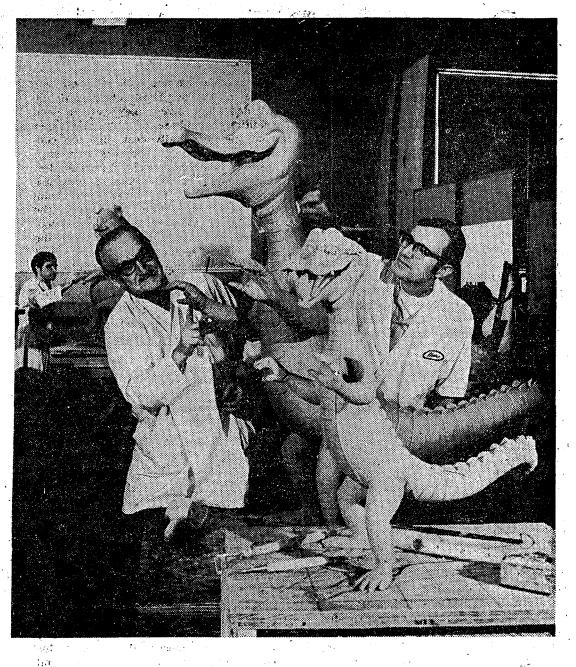

1822—Edward Everett Hale, destined to become a clergyman and author, is born in Boston, son of the editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser. Graduated from Harvard in 1839, he entered the ministry and was pastor of the South Congregational Church, Boston, from 1856 to 1901, and chaplain of the U.S. Senate from 1903 until his death in 1909, at 86.

He is best known, however, for his writings and particularly for a short story, "The Man Without a Country," published in the Atlantic Monthly in 1863 and regarded as a classic of its kind. Benjamin Silliman, first professor of chemistry and natural history at Yale, discovers that carbon vaporizes in an electric arc, so finding a new light source to be put to use especially for street lighting. In 1823, Silliman also prepared hydrofluoric acid for the first time in the United States.

1824—The first U.S. labor strike involving women employes occurs at Pawtucket, R.I., where women weavers in a textile mill walk out on issues involving wages and hours of work.

Gloacchino Antonio Rossini, Italian operatic composer and musician, is at the height of his career. Although a native of Italy, he spent much of his life in Paris, where he now is musical director of the Theater Italien. Following the successful performance of his first opera in Vienna, when he was 18, he was to write many other operas, but also oratorios, chorus

Oriental Rugs Back In Vogue, Around The World

By FREDERICK M. WINSHIP

NEW YORK — There's only one investment you can walk on—an Oriental rug.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans have purchased loomed, hand-knotted Orientals, mainly Islamic rugs from the Middle East, in the past 10 years, and about 1,000 belong to collectors' clubs. The boomlet became a full fledged boom two years ago and 1973 sales at rug dealers, auctions and department stores totaled $50 million, according to industry sources.

Not all rugs sold in America go to Americans. The rug bug has bitten Europeans, too, and many of the finest Turkish and Persian antique carpets are bought by dealers from West Germany, Italy and England. The Japanese are in the market to a lesser degree and prefer Chinese rugs.

So brisk is the trade that antique (prior to 1870) and semi-antique rugs (1870-1920) already are difficult to find, and current production of rugs in the Middle East, India and Pakistan barely keeps up with the demand. What's more, the price of wool that goes into new rugs has skyrocketed. Consequently prices have jumped from 20 to 400 per cent in the past year depending on age, fineness of knotting, artistic merit and scarcity.

"Orientals undoubtedly are an investment, although I think to stress that in selling is a gimmick," said Lee Beshar, member of one of Manhattan's leading dealer families. "People have found the stock market isn't everything it's cracked up to be and are investing in hard goods."

Vogue in the '20s

Shoppers at A. Beshar & Co. and other big city dealers will find price tags of $100 to $500 on average throw rugs and up to $2,000 to $4,000 for room-size carpets. Auction prices on rarer examples climb much loftier and may soon crack the $111,500 record set by a 16th Century Ispahan carpet in 1928.

Orientals enjoyed a vogue throughout the 1920s when many notable private collections were formed, but interest waned during the Depression. After World War II, neverwear-out Orientals were banished to attics and warehouses in favor of wall-to-wall broadloom carpeting. Decorators began using them again in the early 1960s to add color and drama to stark modern interiors.

"And, of course, Orientals look marvelous with Colonial American furniture which so many people are collecting," said stockbroker Russell Pickering of the New York Rug Society, a collectors' club with more than 100 members which sponsors rugs shows and publication of rug books.

"Many young couples are into rugs because they loved handcrafted folk art," Pickering added. "When I began collecting 10 years ago at the age of 34 I was the youngest collector in New York. Now, at 44, I may be the oldest."

HANDWRITING ON THE WALL

By Lloyd Dunn

A short wome pack this writer had the pleasure of judging a handwriting contest sponsored by the Santa Ana Rotarians, and, to make you all aware of how we were all taught to write I'm letting you have a look at the winning team from Taft Elementary School, Grade 4.

So here's to the long, long ago for so many of us when we were just learning to "do what you are told." It was back to the days when "teacher" was something important rating just above or just below Mom and Dad to most of us; when our primary desire was to get a nod of approval or have our practice work hung on the blackboard proclaiming our dexterity to all the world.

Now as you compare your present writing to the carefully drawn conformity these beautiful kids produced you can see what the stresses of life have done to your motor reflexes and your handwriting, And, you can also easily see that most of us somewhere along the line broke with conformity, and concentrated on establishing our own identity and individuality. The fact that some of it is nearly unreadable is really quite an ego

Two Major Dog Shows Set For April County Dates

In Orange Coast German Shepherd Dog Club, Inc. will hold a German Shepherd Specialty Point Show and Obedience Trial,, licensed by AKC (American Kennel Glub) on Sunday April 7, at the Garden Grove Park at 9301 Westminster, in Garden Grove. The show starting at 9 A.M. will continue throughout the day.

A spokesman for the group said that some two hundred of the finest German Shepherds in California will be shown.

There will also be some out of state entries.

Twyla Miner, of Huntington Beach, chairman for the show, looks for this to be one of the finest shows the club has sponsored.

Thomas T. Bennett, advertising chairman for the show stated that many beautiful trophies will be awarded, going to the first four dogs, placing in each Orange Coast German Shepherd Dog Club was organized more than 10 years ago. Its aim is to promote the German Shepherd dog and the betterment of the breed; to educate the people on breeding, handling and the proper caring of their dogs.

Membership is open to anyone with an avid interest in the German Shepherd. Regular monthly meetings, held on the first Friday of each month, at 8 P.M. at the Fullerton Savings and Loan building at 200 W. Commonwealth Avenue in Fullerton, are open to visitors.

Club sponsored Conformation Handling Classes are held each Tuesday evening at 8 p.m. at Woodcrest Park, on Orangethorpe, between Euclid and Harbor in Fulerion.

builder, for isn't it a fact we love the thought of being complicated and difficult to understand?

In the world of graphology those fanciful and unreadable signature scrawls are called "the vice-president signatures;" simply proving these guys are so important they could use their thumbprint and get away with it.

get-away with it.

But this in no way implies that I am critical of those kind of signatures. Instead, I'm inclined to think most of us need to find a little importance and distinction, and what better place than in our handwriting? I think it far surpasses "streaking" as an outlet for our exhibitionism without exposing our more tender areas to the elements.

By the way, if you are all wondering about that whopper sized J in Sample 2 it belongs to one of the two contestants chosen from the more legible Rotarians.

In the contest they came in a strong fourth and fifth, and if you can read the signature I'll wager the Santa Ana City Hall will award you a plaque for perception and human understanding beyond belief. It belongs to a very astute gentleman by the name of James A. Withers, Santa Ana's capable City Attorney who was good sport enough to get into the act.

And what does it all mean? Is there a moral or message here for these struggling youngsters?

It comes out somewhat like this:

Work and practice real hard, kids, and be the good conformist. Do what's expected of you until you get your education. After that you can throw all that training out the window and write like us grown-ups do. You see there comes a time in life it could be dangerous to be too well understood.

Courses Yosemite Nature

A series of nature study courses giving college credit is available through the Yosemite Natural History Association in Yosemite National Park.

The High Sierra will be the setting for 20 field seminars in natural and earth sciences during the coming summer.

Yosemite's high sierra will be the setting for 20 field seminars in natural and earth sciences during the coming summer. Five-day classes will be offered in alpine, treeline and sub-alpine botany, glacier studies, wilderness management, the geology of the Yosemite high country, backpacking, and in wildlife and ecology. In addition, there will be courses on the geologic history of Yosemite Valley, the biology and ecology of the giant sequoias in the Mariposa Grove and on the organization and techniques of environmental education. In each case, the ecological structure of the areas and the accepted practices of minimum impact use will be stressed.

The courses are presented at the college level and earn optional three quarter unto fextension credit. They are designed, however, so that interested laymen will find them stimulating and enjoyable. All will be presented the rugged natural environment of the park. On the teaching staff will be National Park Service naturalist and university professors.

The field seminar program is sponsored by the Yosemite Natural History Association in cooperation with the National Park Service and the extension division of the University of California, Davis, Seminar details are available upon inquiry to the association, Box 545, Yosemite National Park, California 95339

Visitors to London pay almost the highest hotel prices in the world, a Swiss bank study said recently. But according to a new eating guide the hotels need m than money to survive.

"Bring your sandwiches, dear visitor," said the recently published 1974 Good Food Guide.

"Both service and food in London hotels have never been worse since the war,"

"And never has the city given worse value to its guests than in the new (hotel) Egg boxes which the last Labor Government wished upon London."

The Good Food Guide, edited by Christopher Driver, has few kind things to say generally about the quality of British food, or of most British restaurants.

Now in its 23rd year, the guide sells only some 60,000 copies a year. But the Good Food Guide — compiled from reports by 3,000 amateur food critics, screened and sometimes double screened by more professional inspectors — can indicate trends. This year's main trend is inflation.

Mancini Now An Institution In Film Music

By JAMES MEADE

HOLLYWOOD - Henry Mancini is known as a music composer but actually he has become an institution.

- Mancini has been nominated for 13 Oscars and won three; he has 20 Grammy Awards and six Gold Albums. His Oscars were for the score of "Breakfast at Tiffany's" (1962); its song, "Moon River," and the 1963 best song, "Days of ... Wine and Roses."

Mancini has played for several U.S. presidents, the English queen and numerous other heads of state. He has conducted and played in concerts of both popular and serious music; written movie and television scores; is a partner in a half-dozen music publishing houses, and his $250,000 in grants and scholarships for budding musicians has been made part of the Congressional Record.

Do producers still insist on music and lyrics that embrace the movie's title regardless of its appropriateness?

"Of course, sometimes it's ludicrous." Mancini said in an interview. "When it works it's sublime, when it doesn't work it's embarrassing."

Composers do not come to bat as many times in a season as professional baseball players but even the hit writers must miss occasionally.

"I miss a lot but the thing to me is swinging. I go to bat a lot. I like films, that's my form of work. I'm not concerned when I'm writing whether or not it's going to be a big hit.

"A lot of elements enter into that that I have no control over. I could write the most beautiful piece of music in the world and have the greatest words written to it, yet if the picture is a dog, the song just automatically is discounted."

Maneini has no backlog nor trunk of music to open if a producer calls asking about a laid-back piece.

"I've never had time to fill a trunk. I've always been too busy working."

Has Mancini encountered a generation gap in composing for two decades?

"We have the in-and-out fads, things of that sort. We had the Indian music for awhile that the Beatles discovered in their wisdom. That ran its string and various things came in. I think over-all the basic language, whether it's hard or soft, is the rock. Rock is a kind of all-inclusive influence that has had its effect on jazz, pop and even on country music. It's fed itself on everything and yet it's retained its own identity. It's one of those things that you can spot, its influence in every kind of music we have."

Does Mancini have any favorites among other contemporary composers?

"I like what Paul Williams does. Some of the movie music writers have done marvelous work, Michel Legrand, of course, and Francis Lai. It's spread over an awful lot of territory Most rock groups do their own writing. The day of running into a music publisher and saying this is a hit and then going out and getting 20 records of it in a couple of days is gone."

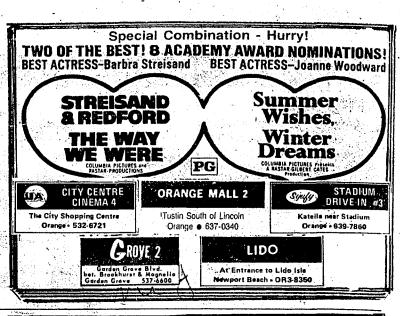

Still there are a lot of overnight successes in the rock field.

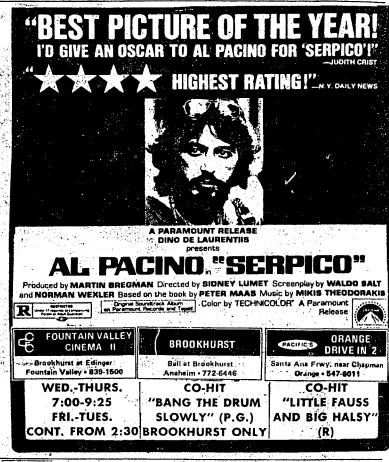

"I think that's the rule in this field. There are some people that struggle writing for a long time and finally are . accepted. There are some who become famous overnight and don't last.

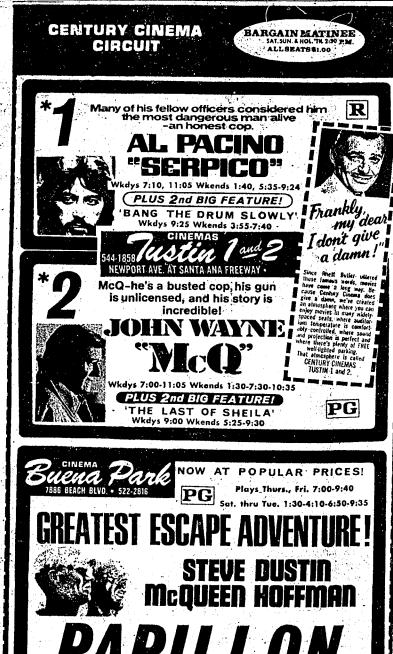

"However, there are exceptions to that. I went to a Bob Dylan concert the other night. It was just marvelous.

"He did all of his things. He was a very big flash when he first came on and he's managed to keep going,"

"Reader's Digest predicts" that the vinyl lined swimming pool is destined to dominate the market within a few years, because it is less expensive to install and maintain. The popularity of the vinyl pool is rapidly increasing due to the safety features, the low initial cost, the markedly reduced maintenance, and the fact that earthquakes, adobe soil, or ground movement have little effect on the swimming pool with the vinyl finish construction.

WITH DORIS CRANDALL

The Magic Pan Creperie is a delicious dining experience. . I had dinner there recently and was delighted with the cuisine, service, and friendly, refreshing decor. The location is Costa Mesa at the north end of South Coast Plaza.

This interesting chain was begun in 1965 in San Francisco, and since that time, has spread across the country—from Atlanta, Georgia; Apsen and Denver; Colorado; Philadelphia, Chicago and New York.

They all have the same pleasing continental atmosphere with wood beamed ceilings, colorful ceramic tile, polished floors, antique prints, baskets of lush greenery and fresh cut flowers on all the tables. Whether it be in the main dining room or the sidewalk cafe, it has all the charm and informality of a French country inn.

The Magic Pan specializes in scrumpatious paper thin and very delicate pancakes known as crepes in France and palacsintas in Hungary.

These delicacies are prepared from a batter of eggs, milk and flour—outstanding for lunch, dinner or a late evening repast. The "Magic Pans", an interesting sight, revolve over flames upside down. A pretty girl then removes the lacey thin crepes from the bottom of the pans and sends them on into the kitchen to be filled with the many tempting stuffings.

The menu is enticing—offering complete meals, snacks and delectible desserts.

Dinner began with a potage St. Germaine spirited with a dash of sherry (or perhaps sour cream). This popular Parisian soup is a blend of a French country pea, chicken and vegetable which is made daily.

My entree was a seafood medley of scallops, shrimp and sliced mushrooms in a bechamel sauce nestling in a crepe with gruyere cheese, accompanied by a fresh chilled spinich salad, topped with bacon, hard boiled eggs with sweet and sour dressing. We also enjoyed a carafe of favorite wine (cocktails are also available)

The menu is varied and inviting with several dinners for selection, such as steak kebob and crepe with steak chunks on a skewer with onion, mushroom, tomato, bacon and green pepper served with a fresh mushroom crepe and a fresh spinach salad. The curried chicken crepe with a spicy apple and toasted coconut topping is served with a mandar-in orange salad or perhaps you would prefer the crepes cannelloni served with the spinach souffle crepe and fresh avocado salad with California dressing.

There are also combination plates where you may select two or three of your favorites. Twelve ala carte crepes and palacsintas such as erab delight, shrimp gournet, chicken elegante, beef bourguignon with wine sauce, or country beef topped with cheddar cheese, Alpine cheese sizzle and more can be found on the menu. There are also a variety of tempting salads such as mixed green, avocado, San Franciso shrimp, besides the previously mentioned mandarin and fresh spinach.

Then we have the fantastic desserts. . . What a pleasure to bite into one of these tasty morsels. There's crepes a la mode, a famous San Francisco specialty with vanilla ice cream, wrapped in a hot crepe, smothered in bittersweet chocolate shavings melted atop with a smidgen of pecan creme. Or, perhaps an apple sizzle spiced with chunky apples topped with cinnamonsugar and toasted almonds would suit your fancy. There's cherries jubilee, crepes with ice cream, raspberry preserves with hot brandied cherry sauce, and cheese blintzes too. The chantilly crepe is filled with fresh bananas sliced and steeped with special brown sugar sauce, whipped cream and almond sliv-

Are you ready for more? There's pecan Monte Carlo—pecans in palacsintas; crepes beignets, delicately crisped and served in a basket with hot brandied apricot sauce or hot brandied chocolate sauce.

The crepe suzette is with brandied orange sauce and the surprise is four thin crepes filled with fruit preserves—apricot, strawberry and rasberry. I decided on a house favorite, the fresh strawberry crepe supreme, sweet berries with choice of sour cream or whipped cream and brown sugar. There are more.

This charming Magic Pan Creperie is open daily Monday through Thursday from 11 a.m. until 10 p.m., Friday and Saturday 'til midnight, and Sunday until 9 p.m. The location is Costa Mesa at South Coast Plaza at the north side, next to the new Bullock's.

Scots Spooks Tour Highly Acclaimed

By-GORDON IRVING

INVERNESS, Scotland-Every year, up and down the highways and byways of Scotland from north to south, tourists and vacationers drive around in search of interesting and romantic things to see

"Let's go 'Nessie'-hunting!" they say.

Oriental Rugs

Weaving of handmade carpets is simple. The warp threads are wound on two horizontal beams which rest upon two upright posts, so that the warp threads are stretched vertically. The beams can turn with ease on the upright posts. The space between the two posts determines the width of the carpet to be woven. As the carpet is being woven, it is wound gradually on the lower beam. The weavers sit on a bench, side by side, facing the framework.

It takes a considerable length of time to weave a rug, and when it is finished, the event is cause for great merrymaking. The master of the work is expected to give a reception for his friends, giving them drinks of sherbat perfumed with rose water.

The size of the loom depends upon the heights of the ceiling in the villagers' homes. The loom must go into one of the rooms, and usually the largest loom that will fit is installed. The larger sized rugs are usually woven in the largest halls of the community mosques. To use the community mosques, a village is required to get permission from his community sheik or mullah (the district's preacher).

In very primitive villages, where there is no electricity or running water, many people use branches of trees for their

Yet the many ghosts and apparitions of Scotland are too often overlooked. It is possible to have a worthwhile "spooks" tour" of this part of northern Britain.

Dozens of ghosts are reputed to haunt Scotland's ancient mansion houses and "White ladies" and "green ladies" have been sighted, too, at midnight on the ramparts of ancient castles.

A tourist officer told me: "We find Americans just love the scenic attractions and the quaint old-worldy atmosphere of Scotland. When we tell them they can also pick up antiques cheap, and probably see a ghost in the bargain, they get really interested."

Hotel owners and managers confirmed to me that visitors are always intrigued by stories of ghosts.

There is one old tradition that a ghostly huntsman haunts Einwoodie Lodge Hotel, near Lockerbie, in the south of

An American visitor, staying overnight in the hotel, went down to breakfast and asked Trixie Mair, a member of the family that owns the hotel, if there had been a party there the previous night.

He had heard someone blowing a hunting horn during the night, confirming a ghostly tale associated with the district about a huntsman who was killed many years ago by a stagecoach.

If you fancy ghost-hunting as a vacation-time interest, there are many other places in Scotland where you can start your search.

Many stately homes have "white ladies." And at historic Stirling Castle, in the heart of Scotland, a "pink lady" is reputed to appear from time to time.

Piano-playing at night is said to be one of the pranks of a defunct usher at Pearce Lodge, Glasgow University, while

Olympic Star Sets Agency For Athletes

Register Staff Writer

Olympic Champions never die, they just become successful in the business world.

At least, such is the hope of Pat (Keller) McCormick.

Olympic records indicate the Los Alamitos housewife and native of Long Beach (Calif.) is the ONLY "double-double" gold medal winner in the history of the ancient games. Mrs. McCormick captured the springboard and platform diving championships on 1952 at Helsinki, Finland and repeated her performance four years later at Melbourne, Australia.

Past performances of Pat McCormick are a matter of record. Credits are as long as the energy crisis gasoline lines. Her achievements in world diving competition are legend, all leading to many accolades. The most recent was being appointed by President Nixon to the U.S. Physical Fitness and Youth Committee plus the President's personal representative to the Olympic Games in Munich Germany in 1972.

The mother of two, Tim and Kelly, has launched a new career and if enthusiasm, dedication and personal connects are ingredients for success, Pat is a cinch to make it big.

Pat McCormick Enterprises, is a service oriented organization seeking avenues of communication between athletes and the public with a goal of fostering cooperation and understanding between the two.

Mrs. McCormick has always been a dreamer and a doer. What she sets for herself as a goal must be accomplished.

"Sports and those participating are becoming targets for criticism, unjustly in most cases," explained Mrs. Mc-Cormick. "We are going to try and tackle four areas in sophisticating sports celebrities. They include employment, conventions and meetings, clinics and workshops along with consultation services."

Under the heading of employment comes the chore of seeking off-season work for an active athlete and full-time connection for those retired from athletics. A clearing house would be established in all major communities throughout the country.

Conventions seeking top sports personalities as guest speakers or exhibitions could be arranged through the firm along with providing an active program for wives accompanying husbands.

Clinics and workshops will be organized to aid others in putting clinics together in any sport. Such clinics can be useful toward teaching basic skills in a sport and help advanced students further skills.

Consultation advice for business firms and organizations in setting up athletic programs for closer harmony within the personnel framework is a very important part of the new group being founded by Mrs. McCormick. This would also include merchandising of sports related products, particularly if it is harmonious with the individual star athlete or team.

The first major undertaking by Pat McCormick Enterprises will be an Easter Sports Workshop at Los Alamitos High School on Tuesday and Wednesday. Amateur athletes in Orange County can use the Easter vacation period for getting into shape with the aid of top professional sports dignitaries.

The workshop is open to all age groups, providing instruction for both beginning and advanced students in div-(Continued On Page 25)

onductors Great Need Of Music World

BY FREDERICK M. WINSHIP NEW YORK - Symphony orchestras have proliferated so rapidly in the United States in the past decade that qualified, experienced conductors are about as hard to find as the lost chord.

AND THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

"I'd say better training of conductors is the Number One need in music today," said Peter Mennin, president of New York's Juilliard School, one of the nation's preeminent conservatories. "It is generally agreed that the level of American orchestras surpasses any other level in the world, but the major orchestras still are conducted by conductors trained elsewhere."

The situation, which tends to get brushed under the symphony hall carpet, has not been helped by a lack of standards when an orchestra board comes to hiring a conductor. One of the nation's top music directors, Lorin Maazel of the Cleveland Orchestra, describes the whole system of evolving conductors as "outrageous" considering that symphonies are a big business with 20 million customers annually.

The American Symphony Orchestra League, headquartered in Vienna, Va., lists more than 1,000 orchestras professional, semi-professional and nonprofessional. There are 28 major orchestras with annual budgets of $1 million or more, 90 metropolitan orchestras with budgets of $100,000 to $1 million, 30 urban orchestras in the $50,000 to $100,000 class, and hundreds of community orchestras with budgets of less than $50,000. Total orchestra expenses in 1973 were $100 million.

Metropolitan symphonies have mushroomed by 44 orchestras since 1964. It is the category that is most competitively voracious for young, glamorous conductors who have their long range sights set on directorship of a major orchestra. Eighty per cent of metropolitan orchestras hire American—a post World War II trend-but less than half the major orchestras have done so.

PREVIOUS EXPERIENCE

"Before World War II, the conductor usually a European —was the outgrowth of previous music experience," said Maazel, 43, a onetime prodigy who made his conducting debut at nine, found fame in Europe, and became the second American conductor ever to head one of the Big Six American symphonies (the others are New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, and Cincinnati).

"Someone around an opera house was given a chance, or a composer gardually would begin to conduct. Now people just up and decide at 14 that they're going to be a conductor before they can even read a score.

"So they go to music schools and are turned out as conductors, although there is no proper training—real experience with professional orchestras any-where. They win competitions, which generally proves only that the winners have good nerves. Then they apprentice themselves to a big orchestra to carry out responsibilities they are not equipped for, while getting very little chance to conduct.

"These people_I call them pseudo conductors—line up a constellation of supporters who force them down the throats of an unwilling orchestra and an imocent public. Suddenly they're conductors of an orchestra and haven't even been through the mill. Very few of them could even meet the basic standards that should govern hiring a conductor."

Maazel's standards, which he thinks should be required by an international "symphonic board of acceptance", would be (1) mastery of at least one instrument, (2) composition of at least five orchestral works, (3) knowledge of the standard repertory to the extent of identifying compositions by glancing at a page or two. (4) ability to write several pages of a score by memory, (5) demonstration of the ability to "give life to a score" in actual performance. Maazel also favors an examination for possible chearing impairment.

MASTER CLASSES

"Most of the top people in the field today could pass this test by the age of 19," Maazel said. "Once you have this musical background, you're ready to be coached by someone with experience. I believe in conductors holding significant courses —true master classes."

Such coaching opportunities are, unfortunately, comparatively rare.

More than 100 young conductors applied to attend the American Symphony Orchestra League's three-week intensive study course at Orkney Springs, Va., last summer, but only 12 could be accommodated.

The attraction at Orkney Springs for the past decade has been 88-year-old music advisor Richard Lert, conductor of the Pasadena (Cal.) Symphony. Lert, pre-Hitler conductor of the Berlin State Opera, is the last surviving link to the so-called golden age of conductors in Berlin and his native Vienna and conduit of a great romantic tradition.

A project new this season is the Affiliate Artists Inc., career development program for young conductors underwritten by Exxon Corp. Affiliate conductor posts. were established with the Atlanta, National (Washington, D.C.), Pittsburgh, and San Diego symphonies and the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra to help in rehearsing and conducting student and community concerts and at least one full orchestra concert during the regular season.

Tape Pirate Plunder High

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. - Tape pirat s plunder the music recording industry of $200 million a year, according to Ampex Corporation, the leading producer of recorded tape entertainment.

Ampex said its own losses on its library of 100 record labels runs into the millions of dollars.

Pirated tapes are unauthorized recordings made at a live performance and sold without permission or payment to the artists.

Ampex's figures on tape piracy, however, include losses from what it calls "bootleg" tapes and "counterfeit" tapes. Bootleg tapes are copies of authorized recordings made without permission of the artist or recording company and sold at lower prices without payment of royalties to the artists or producers.

Counterfeit tapes are bootleg tapes that also copy the original manufacturer's label and packaging.

The tape pirate can sell for $2 to $4 a copy of the tape that Ampex must get $6.95 for at retail.

In 1972 the federal government outlawed the unauthorized duplication and sale of a recorded performance. Some states have also passed laws.

Early this year five corporations were indicted by a grand jury in New Mexico on charges of violating the federal law. The case is still in court.

Last June the California Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a state law against state piracy.

A spokesman for Ampex said that now that some laws have stood the test of court challenge, more states will be acting against the pirates.

If the piracy were not ended, the Ampex spokesman said, recording companies would be unlikely to continue large investments in improving their produce and introducing new artists.

"Curtailment of piracy will ultimately mean further improvements such as Dolbyization and quadraphonic recordings, improved quality product, top artists performances, and greater enjoyment for the consumer," the Ampex spokesman said. UPI

ASK DICK KLEINER

Imitators Follow Fast On Success

DEAR DICK: Could you please tell me if Cher Bono has had a nose job?-GLENDA DUCKWALL, Van Buren, Ind. No, but she recently had a husband

DEAR DICK: I saw an old Jerry Lewis flick a couple of days ago called "The Brooklyn Gorilla Meets Bela Lugosi." Was the person who played Jerry's straight man Dean Martin? It looked like him-RICH ROHE, Montoursville, Pa.

No, it wasn't Dean Martin. And, as a matter of fact, it wasn't Jerry Lewis you saw, either. Back in the days when Martin and Lewis first clicked as a movie team some opportunistic producers teamed two second-raters who looked like Dean and Jerry and made that picture, in a shabby attempt to get in on the profits. Their names were Sammy Petrillo and Duke Mitchell and they're the ones you saw in that film.

DEAR DICK: So much trash comes out of Hollywood and I'd like to know if there is a studio out there that makes any religious films?-MARTIN ARDEN, Concord, Ga.

Hollywood has everything, even religious film makers. There are several, with Family Films probably the foremost. Started in 1948 by two brothers, Melvin and Stan Hersh, Family Films produces "This Is the Life," a half-hour series for Lutheran Television that's been on 22 years and just finished a movie for the Southern Baptist called "Human Dimensions."

DEAR DICK: My husband and I are great fans of Burt Bacharach and we would like to know where his future appearances will be. If he's going to be out here we'd like to make reservations to see him. - MRS. RAY GROVEAU, LaMirada, Calif.

Burt isn't doing many personal appearances. He did one in Chicago this winter. "He's got resources." Nothing else is on his schedule at the moment. (ED. NOTE: Bacharach will appear in concert at Anaheim Convention Center May 17)

DEAR DICK: On the program Truth or Consequences, what do the people laugh at so much when the show opens up?-CHARLES W. ROCHE, New Orleans, La.

They laugh at the sign that says "Laugh." It's a funny sign.

DEAR DICK: When in Hawaii, do you know if it's possible to see them shoot Hawaii Five-O? We sail for Hawaii July 1 and will be in Honolulu July 8 and 9.-MRS. TOM McNAMARA, Portsmouth, O.

The show should be shooting around that time-unless the threatened actors' strike happens. If not, they'll be there. You'll have to call the Hawaii Five-O office in Honolulu to find out exactly where the company will be filming on the days you are there. They never know. ahead of time.

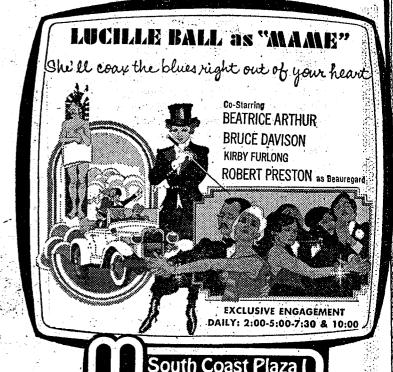

DEAR DICK: Why are the Shirley. Temple movies repeated so often? Why don't they show some of Margaret O'Brien's movies? I'd love to see "The Secret Garden" once more.-MRS. C., Chalmette, La.

It's a question of economics, as these things usually are. Shirley's movies make a nice package, which can be bought and sold neatly. Margaret didn't make enough starring films to create such a package.

es and songs. He brought melody and song to the opera, replacing long recitatives, previously common, and his works were highly popular. Notable among them were "The Barber of Seville," "Othello," and "William Tell." He died in Paris in 1868, aged 76.

1872—Samuel Finley Breese Morse, officially recognized as the inventor of the electric telegraph, and introducing a new era in world communication, dies in New York at 80. Graduated from Yale in 1810. his interest in electricity, had been aroused by Prof. Benjamin Silliman. Art then was his first interest, however, and he studied in London and gained recognition there as well as in New York for painting and sculpture. He organized the National Academy of Design, which he headed for 16 years.

Morse had conceived the idea of transmitting messages by telegraphy in 1832, utilizing the so-called Morse code. He had perfected the apparatus to such an extent by 1838 that he asked Congress to appropriate money for an experimental telegraph line between Washington and Baltimore. At last, in March, 1843, a $30,000 appropriation was approved and the first messages were transmitted on May 24, 1844. From that time, the success of the electric telegraph was assured.

1773-Quebec was an important city in the British North American colonies in 1773. Its population, exceeding 15,000 was almost entirely French. The city itself was on the edge of the St. Lawrence River, a tidal river, with a harbor deep enough to accommodate ships of the greatest draught, although it was closed by ice three or four months of the year. The town was an administrative and fur-trading center, but shipbuilding and shoemaking were other important activi-

Quebec had been the capital of the province since 1763, the year all of Canada was ceded to Britain by France, following the Seven Years War in Europe and the related French and Indian Wars in the new world. It was very much a French town, having been settled by Samuel de Champlain, French navigator, explorer and administrator, in 1608.

An attempt was to be made in 1775 by American revolutionary forces to capture Quebec and bring the people of Canada into the war against the British. The invading forces were led by Gen. Benedict Arnold and by Gen. Richard Montgomery, who had conducted troops over a long and largely disastrous journey northward from the Colonies. The effort failed, Montgomery was killed, and Arnold was wounded, but retreated with what was left of his men.

1823-Joseph Medill is born near St. John, in New Brunswick, Canada. As a young man, he moved to Massillon, Ohio, where he was to be admitted to the bar in 1846 and practice law until 1851.

Meanwhile, he published a paper, The Republican, at Coshocton, Ohio, but in 1852 established another, the Daily Forest City, in Cleveland. A Whig paper, it was united with the Free Democrat, in 1853, and called the Cleveland Leader. He sold his interest in that paper in 1855, and moved to Chicago to join in the purchase of the Chicago Tribune, then in its eighth year of publication. He was to that paper until his death in 1899. He made it a force in the development of the newly formed Republican Party, an antislavery voice, and an early supporter of Abraham Lincoln, with whom Medill was intimately acquainted.

1873—Illinois farmers at this time convened in Springfield to organize a movement to combat discriminatory railroad freight rates and mortgage rates. This was an early move by farmers throughout the nation to protect and advance their interests. The Order of the Patrons of Husbandry, or the Grange movement, had started in Washington in 1867, with Granges in 44 states by 1873, and considerable political strength by 1880. -By ROBERT DESMOND

Filipino Fans Adore Film Super People

MANILA - The Philippine film industry has virtually taken off the ground into a wild world of flying super Films fashioned after Superman, Captain Marvel and Captain America are daily drawing crowds at the box office.

To see one is to court madness. But Filipinos who make up the "Bakya (wooden shoes) crowd" patronizing local flicks—about half of 23.4 million movie goers monthly by official count-simply love them.

The current craze for superheroes emerged in Philippine motion pictures after martial law was proclaimed a year and a half ago. Martial law rules ban the glorification of raw violence, crime and sex— previously prime ingredients of Philippine films.

Kung Fu films still are popular; so are the grade B cowboy and cops and robbers films where the theme is the triumph of good over evil.

Slapstick Added

That theme dominates the super people films also, with plenty of slapstick comedy added.

It all began when Filipino actress Vilma Santos donned a crash helmet with wings, a bikini over tights and boots in the film "Lipad (fly) Darna, Lipad."

Darna, portrayed by Miss Santos, is based on the comic strip characters Batman and Robin. She, of course, has a sidekick like Batman.

Resurrected from films of two decades ago, Darna this time is pitted against an evil woman whose head is entwined with snakes like Medusa in Greek mythology.

The film grossed 8 million pesos ($1.1 million), one of the top moneymakers last year, according to its producers. Its box office success has led to the making of "Darna and the Giants," Producers are planning to show one Darna film every six months.

Scrawny Supermen

"It's stupid," said Darna's creator, Filipino novelist Mars Ravelo. "I myself don't like it.

"It's hard to believe that the Philippines has an 83 per cent literacy rate. But let's face it, it's what the people want. We give it to them. Otherwise the movie industry will collapse."

"Zoom, Zoom Superman," a parody of the American comic strip character, came next and ran right into copyright troubles. But that did not deter a host of other super films from cropping up

Most of the Filipino supermen are scrawny, but what they lack in muscle is made up for with a lot of padding and comic antics.

"It's escapism," Ravelo said, "People want to escape reality, hunger, poverty, to go into a world of fantasy."

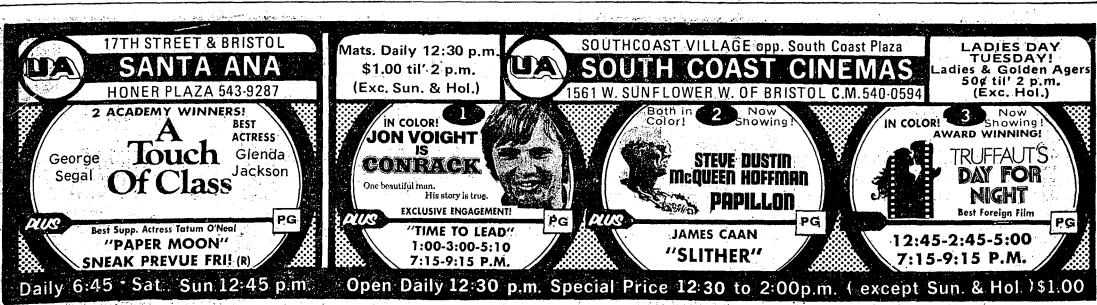

Ravelo says the "super films" trend will last about a year. UPI

Puccini Mass Released For Publication

By WILBORN HAMPTON

ROME - In 1880 a young music student wrote a mass as part of his final exam at the Milan Conservatory where he was studying.

Although his professor, Carlo Angeloni, who was also one of Italy's most severe critics, praised the work extravagantly, the young student was not all that proud of his mass and declined to allow it to be published.

Throughout the rest of his life Giacomo Puccini referred to his mass for four voices with orchestra as his "youthful sin" and refused to allow its publication.

Now, on the 50th anniversary of his death, the Puccini family has given in to a clamor of world music entreaties and authorized its publication.

Vatican Radio has brought out the first recording with Gino Sinimberghi as tenor, John Giavola as baritone and full chorus and orchestra under the direction of Alberico Vitalini. It is a beautifully harmonic and melodius work.

Puccini composed the Credo of the mass in 1878 for performance in Lucca, near his hometown of Massaciuccoli, on the feast day of San Paolino, Patron of Lucca. He completed the mass two years later for his final exam and its first and last complete performance was again in Lucca.

Puccini was influenced by another professor, Amilcare Ponchielli, who turned his interest toward the theater and even found a writer with a libretto for Puccini to compose his first opera -Le Villiwhich La Scala staged the following year.

With his initial success and a quick conmission for a second opera-Edgard -Puccini never looked back. And it is these first operas which make the newly published mass so interesting.

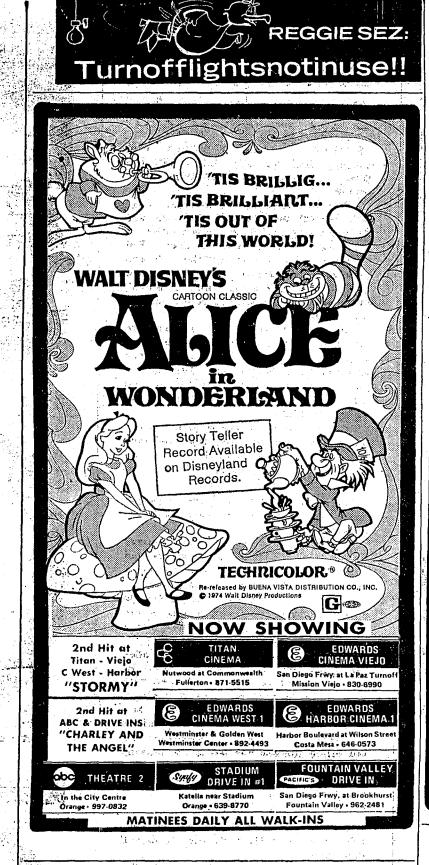

Puccini constantly plagiarized his own early works for theme's in operas. This might explain one reason he did not want the mass published, since several themes from the mass, developed more fully, appear in later operas.

In Edgard, for instance, the church scene in the first act is taken directly from the Kyrie of the mass. And the beautiful Agnus Dei from the mass appears later in the second act, Madrigal in Manon Lescaut.

One also finds in the mass the lyric and theatrical style which characterized a large part of sacred music in the 19th century. For example, the mass bears musical traces of what theatrical audiences would later hear as the Te Deum in Tosca or scenes out of Suor Angelica.

Even if Puccini's youthful sin was found to be "a bit theatrical" by his professors, it is now the Vatican which has given us this important work to add to the library of one of music's greatest composers. UPI

Raymond Spent Lifetime On Stage And The Movies

By NANCY ANDERSON

HOLLYWOOD - In 1929, a blond, 21-year-old actor scored a huge personal triumph on Broadway in a play called "Young Sinners," and every studio in Hollywood took notice.

Though the boy, Raymond Guion, was a youngster, he was by no means a neophyte in his chosen profession.

He'd been an actor since he was 5 and had made his Broadway debut long before he went into "Young Sinners," he had five Bradway plays to his credit. So, when movie scouts observed that this seasoned young trouper also had sex appeal, they went for him like a flock of chickens after a sack of corn.

"I got offers from all the studios." the former Raymond Guion reminisces. "I liked Jesse Lasky, so I went to Para-

And there he got a new name: Gene Boymond.

Gene, whose career has embraced so much (he's been a playwright and composer as well as an actor), performs now mly spasmodically.

Recently though, he's worked in two bows for CBS, a segment of "Apple's Way" which aired March 24 and a special, "The First Woman President," to air April 14.

But most of his time is devoted to various business interests.

His first movie was "Personal Maid" in which he co-starred with Nancy Carroll. However, the film which endeared him to picture-goers was "Sadie McKee, made on loan out to MGM.

After two years at Parmount, he freelanced for a time then signed a contract with RKO where he made, among other pictures, a series of light comedies with Ann Sothern.

As his career prospered, Raymond developed two addictions which strongly affected his life.

The first was for Jeanette-MacDonald, to whom he was married from 1937 until her death in 1965.

They met when they arrived simultaneously at the home of a friend and went in together, giving rise to a rumor that they were enjoying a romance.

The rumor grew after Gene and Jeanette encountered each other again at a premiere at Grauman's Chinese Theater. She was with her mother and he was with his agent, so they sat together.

Finally, after a third unplanned meeting at the home of their mutual attorney, Gene made a suggestion.

"Since everyone thinks we are going out together," he said, "why don't we?" Their marriage followed two years later and was a total success, as happy as their fans believed it to be.

"When we married," Gene says, "I was working at RKO and Jeanette at MGM, and we told our studios we wanted to be free for two months for a honeymoon. They had to make some adjustments, but they gave us the time."

The second addiction which strongly shaped Raymond's life was flying and the U.S. Air Force.

"I might not have learned to fly," he thinks, "except for World War II.

"Jeanette and I were having a house party at Lake Arrowhead the weekend Hitler invaded Poland, and Johnny Mack Brown and I were listening to the news together.

"I said, 'I don't know what you are going to do, Johnny, but I'm going down from this mountain and learn to fly. We're going to be in a war pretty soon, and when it begins I want to be in the Air Corps.' "

As good as his word, Raymond became a pilot on active duty with the Air Corps from March, 1942, to October, 1945.

He continued in the Air Force Reserve until, at the age of 60, he was forced to retire with the rank of colonel.

"I believe very much in the service." he says, "not because I like war, but because I don't. We can only stay out of war if we can defend ourselves.

"During my last year in the reserve, I made 11 trips to South Vietnam.'

Raymond describes his role in "The First Woman President" as "a small one," but he speaks more enthusiastically about his part in "Apple's Way."

"It's really a good role," he says, "in a good, hearty story about good people.'

Star Fears Immorality Grows, Result Of Striving For Money

NEW YORK - "I can't talk about other countries because I don't know them but I do think we've become immoral in this country," said Jack Gilford, an Academy Award contender. He was nominated as best supporting actor for his skillful performance in "Save the Tiger."

A much admired Broadway actor, he has twice been nominated for a Tony Award: "I'm always a nominee but never a bride." He played Jack Lemmon's honest business partner in "Save the Tiger."

"The movie says something about business per se that a lot of people think but don't say aloud," he said. "I think the system breaks down in business. I can't imagine a $50,000-a-year man being asked to do something dishonest by his boss and he says, 'No, I'll quit my job first.'

"The striving for money is one cause of immorality. There are enormous pressures in business and this leads to lies and corruption. You do find decent people here and there. There's a lot of them in the small Connecticut town where we have a house and five acres.'

Gilford stars with Lou Jacobi in Neil Simon's "The Sunshine Boys," at the Lunt-Fontanne Theater. Jacobi was the explosive Mr. Kapopoulis opposite Kay Medford, on the old pre-roast Dean Mar-

"Jacobi is so funny I sometimes have to clench my fist to keep from laughing," he said. "I have never broken up in front of an audience and I never intend to. Neil Simon based this marvelous fiction on the old vaudeville team of Smith & Dale.

"The guys we play can't stand each other, although they worked as a team for 43 years. I'm the one who was poked and spat on all those years. Smith & Dale were very close. I'll tell you how close. They bought adjoining cemetery plots. Charlie Dale is dead, but Joe Smith is 90 and living in an actors home in Englewood, N.J."

Everybody's mother is special. Jack Gilford's mother was special in a special leaned forward in his chair, paused a moment and then began an anecdote about Will Rogers.

Rogers' Gags Were Froth On Great Deal Of Wisdom

"He was in the film, 'State Fair,' and he was getting along very well with the pig in it that played Blue Boy, the prize-winning hog in the film. Sometimes when the crew would look for him, they would find him in a field with his head resting on the pig's haunches.

"At the end of the film," he went on, "they offered the pig to Rogers. But he refused. He said, 'I could never eat a fellow actor.' "

There was an unmistakable respect for Rogers in Whitmore's voice as he told the story, and it arises from the fact that Whitmore has come to know Rogers well. It is the result of playing the Oklahoma cowboy, performer and columnist in the one-man show, "Will Rogers U.S.A."

There is nothing about Whitmore that evokes the prairie philosopher. Whitmore is city born and bred-a native of White Plains, one of the bedroom communities of New York City. He is urbane as well as urban although he good-naturedly disavows that attribute.

So there's the question: Why did he fundertake the role?

"Inever thought of it." Whitmore replied, "even though I brought up my children for 21 years next to his ranch house in Santa Monica (Calif.).

"I thought of his work as very perishavaudeville, newsprint and radio, and I thought of him merely of his period -an antidote for the malaise of his time."

Whitmore changed his mind, however, when he began to study his subject.

"There are millions of his words on microfilm in a museum in Claremont, Okla, Juntil I went there, I knew only what everyone knew about him, that he had said 'I never met a man I didn't like' and things like that."

The experience of Claremont convinced Whitmore that the familiar tags were just "the froth on a great deal of wisdom."

Nevertheless, he had serious misgivings about taking on the role.

"I wanted to hedge my bets," he revealed, "so I chose a place as far from New York and the reviewers as possible -Webster Falls, Mo."

The tactic failed, for a Variety reviewer was in the audience.

Afters the show, Whitmore and the reviewer happened to find themselves in the same restaurant, and he came up to

"You don't look anything like Will Rogers," Whitmore quoted the reviewer as saying, "but when you make the transformation, it's incredible."

That was in 1970, and the beginning of a run that lasted two years.

But why repeat himself?

The answer was admirably pragmatic, "Because it works, audiences enjoy it. Also I'm reasonably well recompensed for it."

But what about other things he could be doing if he weren't doing Will Rogers?

"What other things?" he fired back. "There isn't that much work these days, you know."

Since Whitmore is a veteran of 28 years' experience in the theater, films and television, that bleak statement indicates how bad the picture is in show business.

That career began professionally when he was 25. It took place in 1946 when Whitmore, just out of the Marine Corps, played a bit and doubled as stage manager in a light comedy, "The Milky

It was a happy beginning for him because he got $110 a week, and the job lasted for six months.

He was then out of work for two years. But his career then began to pick up with roles in such plays as "Command Decision" on Broadway. For his role in it he was honored as the Best Newcomer of the Season.

As it must to all promising newcomers, a call came shortly from Hollywood to perform in "Battleground." His work in that inspired an Academy Award nomination.

From then on, as he puts it succinctly, "it was good money and good parts."

The good money and good parts were secured from films like "The Asphalt Jungle," "Planet of the Apes," "Madigan," "Tora, Tora, Tora," and "The Guns of the Magnificent. Seven.'

Whitmore has been the star of two television series and a frequent guest on countless others, but he is enthusiastic about none of his work in that medium.

It springs from no innate aversion to the medium, only to the poor quality of most of it...

Whitmore's main ambition, in fact, is to star in a television series, but not a run-of-the-mill one.

"I want to do a television series that really makes some sort of contribution to America's understanding of itself. Let me make it as pompous as possible. We're a good nation-we're not reckless and we shouldn't be despairing."

With that is the fear that is endemic among actors: "This may be my last job," he said quietly.—CNS

Brooklyn," he said. "She was the only woman on her street who was arrested three times. During Prohibition, in the late '20s and early '30s she made potato whiskey and prune whiskey; it was green but not poisonous. She and my father broke up and she had to support us some way. She used to say, 'I'm terribly embarrassed about starving.' She was marvelous."

TV and theater are green pastures for him. He did the Crackerjack commercial on TV for 10 years: "I think it was the longest-running commercial. The last year I did it, I was paid $53,000 for two days' work."

His Broadway hits include "A Funny ... Thing Happened on the Way to the merfeel a part of everything."

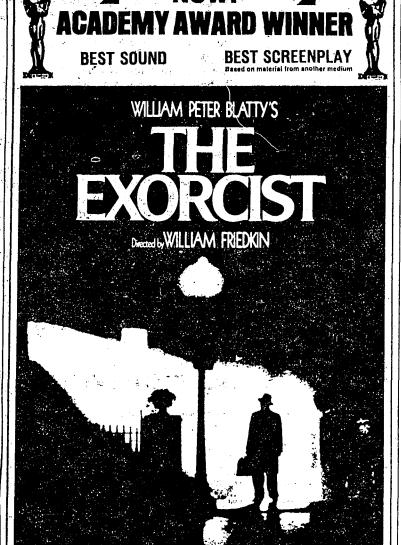

Forum," "The Diary of Anne Frank," "Cabaret" and "No, No, Nanette," playing Ruby Keeler's husband.

"I owe my friendship with Ruby to that show. The warmth and sincerity she projected across the footlights is genuine. 'Nanette' should have run five years it ran two. The producer, Mrs. Cyma Rubin, was very inept. She ran it into the ground."

Gilford is married to Madeline Lee, a producer and casting director. They have a daughter (hers) and two sons (theirs). One son is farming in Minnesota, of all things, and the other is interested in filmmaking.

Directors of the Laguna Beach Museur: of Art have announced two new membership classifications, to be added to the recently initiated Friends of the Museum category.

According to board president Jack

Glenn, donation of $100 will entitle patrons to a tax deductible Donor Membership. In addition, donation of a work of art, valued in excess of $250, will label the donor as a Connoisseur of the Laguna Beach Museum of Art.

Patrons already in the Doner category are Glenn, a Corona del Mar gallery owner; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Lyon of Laguna Hills, and Alton E. Allen of Laguna Beach, former member of the Orange County Board of Supervisors.

In the Friends category at $25 per patron, membership has increased from 10 members three months ago to a present status of 70.

Other museum membership categories, all tax deductiable and contributing to the support of the non-profit Museum. are Sustaining and Associate Artist at $15; Art Affiliate, $17.50, and Student (under 18 years of age), at $2.50.

Associate and Artist members are eligible to enter the juried Spring and Fall 'All' Media Membership shows, a December All Media Membership Sale, and submit crafts for sale in the Museum store. In addition, artist members may be reviewed for future invitational and one-man shows.

Old Sol Has Dark Influences, Too

By ANDY WILSON Register Staff Writer

The state of the s

Now you take the ordinary astrologer - like Herr Whozit, who worked for Hitler and told him, "You're doing right, Mien Fuhrer, you'll kick them Russkis in the pants at Stalingrad" - he or she will tell you nice things about yourself with mild warnings about the days ahead.

But Maria Elise Crummere in "Sun-Sign Revelations" (Viking Press, $5.95) tells you what kind of cad, blackguard, ox, sluggard and louse you are by nature. One can assume that if you are anything else, it's an affectation.

Astrologer Crummere is a member of the board of directors of the Astrological Guild of America, and among other assigned duties was cast astrologer for the stage productions of "Hair." (So that's how an amibitous performer gets a role? He brings his chart, not his talent to an audition).

All is not serenity among the children of the zodiac. The children of Aries, for instance she points out are egomaniacs, Taurans are insensitive bullys, and Leos are prima donnas. Pisceans are spiritual panhandlers and Librans are narcissists.

This negative approach to the astral influences on the lives of mere humans is probably as believable as the positive approaches, but, to the believer, not as comforting.

She suggests that Capicornians wouldnever be found streaking, so, to test the occult, next time you see a sprinter in the raw get him or her into a telephone booth and ask about the birthday. And, when you see a middleaged person with a prominent stomach, pat it in a friendly way and remark, "born under the sign of Cancer, I see."

For the first time since Congress voted to limit the service of a United States President to two consecutive terms, the people who elect Presidents are eyeing the office itself.

Talk of impeachment is disturbing. The electorate doesn't like it. It is an attack on a symbol, an iconoclasm one doesn't want.

Impeachment, why? Is the office or a man on trial.

Michael Novak looks at the office in "Choosing Our King" (Macmillan Publishing Co., $7.95) and finds that it is a seat of power; that the President is more than the chief executive, he is the high priest, the prophet and the king of the United States, chosen, crowned, anointed and put to work. He is the personification of a nation's goals, ambitions and ideals.

His department, the executive, is supposed to be equal to the other two governmental departs, the legislative and judicial; but an unanticipated medium has come along to make the president a little more equal than the others. Television can focus on the presidential face and figure and it is clearly seen. It cannot focus on the face of Congress, or the bench, and bring a sharp image to the electroate.

Politically Novak has aligned himself wiht liberal politicans in the past, and he analyzes what they did wrong in recent campaigns, how they were made the issue by a President on the defense, not the other way around as it had often been in the past when the incumbent defended his actions stoutly.

One may not agree wholly with Novalr's suggestions on the institution of the office of the President, which he is not seeking to destroy or reduce, but his proposals are made from the viewpoint of a practical man in politics who has been to the hustings and learned from them.

I suppose it had to happen - an illustrated gourmet cookery book with nudes.

Not too nude, mind you. They are in the background of the illustrations, a hint that eating can be sensual, that one can putter about the kitchen in the buff preparing delectable viands while stand ing a safe distance from the stove so that no sputtering oil will throw hot droplets on the naked tummy-tum-tum because that would cause burty-hurt-hurt.

"...And For Dessert ... " contains the recipes and plate arrangements of Thom Wilmoth, third in a family of chefs, and color photos by Ron Adams who wrote the lyrical prose in praise of food. It is published by Groupe One, Inc., 4016 Jones St., NE, Renton Wash., at $12.95.

The proof of cook books, unlike some others, is in the cooking, not the reading particularily. This is a handsome volume with more art than text.

Check Your Coins

By LEE MARTIN, NLG

Once again Lincoln cents are in the news. On March 27 the Director of the Mints, Mary Brooks, in a talk before the House Banking and Currency Committee stated that the Treasury has no intention of changing the copper cents in 1974.

They hope that the price fluctuations will be moderated and that the price of copper will stabilize but she did stress that when copper reached $1.28 per pound, it passed the point where it cost more than one cent to make a cent. There is a greater demand for copper cents than ever before and much of this may be because business is stocking up against a possible shortage. There was a threat included in the speech which may give pause to anyone hoarding large amounts of cents.

She stated that the hoarding of pennies and their melting for sale as copper can and will be made a criminal offense when the Secretary of the Treasury determines that this is required to stop a disruption to the economy. It should be noted that the same type of threats were given when silver was hoarded and they were enforced for a short period but then became legal to melt silver coins and is legal today.

Recent news about the future of the copper cent has indicated that the aluminum alloy under consideration is 30 per cent zinc, and 70 per cent copper but if the price of copper continues to rise, this too would be changed as circumstances and costs vary. Thus, in today's coin field we have some strange circumstances. Collectors would like to save cents: because copper coins are certain to depart from circulation. The threat of penalties for hoarding makes one pause. We were told aluminum cents would be made in 1974. Now this idea has been dropped and zinc-copper coins are planned for 1975. It all adds up to another snafu but coin collectors will benefit because publicity about the now you see it - now you don't copper cent will make everyone aware of our hobby.

There appears to be no law against collectors saving a few rolls and, in fact, there is no law at this time against anyone holding as many cents as they wish. Should the copper cents become short, we can anticipate the same type of ruling that forced citizens in 1934 to turn their gold in for face value. We have lost gold and silver from circulation. It is pretty sure that pure copper coins will take the same route. Now all that remains is nickel from the coins of long ago and this, too, may someday join the ranks of "memory alloy" although at present this seems like a dim possibility.

century, he started his own store with the aid of a wealthy friend. He bought out his partner as success began and his next venture was to buy the prestigious book firm, Brentano's, then failing. He sold the Washington and New York branches. Today, his son Carl runs Kroch's and Brentano's 15 stores in the Chicago area.

He interrupted his story abruptly with, "But we should talk about books, not me." His visitor asked a number of questions. "But you ask such difficult ones. How can I answer?"

What book most influenced his life? Which of today's authors will be known 100 years hence? Who is his favorite author? Least favorite? (A few seconds of chuckling, obviously rolling some names around in his mind, but no answer.) How many books he had head—50,000, 200,000 or more? "I don't think in numbers." If he did, he might have been a banker.

Should books be censored?

"Positively not! I think it is wrong. You always make a mistake. What one man considers offensive another will say is a first class book. Censorship is a very dangerous and unhappy thing."

On young people's reading habits today: "They read too much trash. They should be learning about life, gaining knowlege, by reading the great books of this and the nineteenth century."

Has he sympathy for Solzhenitsyn? "Well, you can't blame the Russians for kicking him out and you can't blame him for writing the way he did.

Camera Corner

By GILBERT HILL

The trick in creative improvement of slides is mostly the decision to try it—because it is relatively easy and simple to do.

Then, the limits become personal imagination, patience and the manual dexterity to handle what are really tiny bits of film — and, of course, time to both work and create.

Here again, as in most photography, real success depends upon absolute cleanliness. A tiny speck of dust or microscopic hair can mar any picture upon projection—and a fingerprint will virtually destroy it.

The easiest slides for creative work are those thin, just slightly overexposed ones that appear washed out when projected.

There is the silhouette with virtually nothing but blank sky in the background.

Then there is that perfectly gorgeous sunset which you overexposed. Or there are the pictures which came back with skies that appear really pale yellow—the ones you took on a cloudy day and didn't believe there was that much light, and so "goofed" a bit on exposure.

How will the silhouette look against the sunset? Fine! Now with a sharp pair of scissors remove the film by cutting the paper mount very close to the film—just outside the little depression around the slide. Cut off two edges of the mount and remove the film.

Do the same for the second film. Now, if you're going to remount in glass, select the right mask and position the silhouette over the opening and stick it down with a couple of slivers of Scotch tape—outside the picture area, of course.

Now position the sunset picture, and stick it down with tape—fold your mask over to conceal your work, and mount it in glass.

You can put in blue skies, clouds, and create all kinds of pictures that never existed using basically the same technique—which is the way virtually all prize winners are created.

Of course, you can go right back into a cardboard mount with your new picture. And it has the advantage actually of being usable in ordinary projector magazines because it is still thin enough to work. Cardboard mounts—and a great variety of patented kinds in both plastic and metal—can be purchased from your photo supply dealer.

It is interesting that many of these mounts work perfectly for some and are quickly abandoned by others. So, buy only a few until you find out which one you prefer—and then use it.

Stamping Around

By LEA BLAUVELT

A 10-cent commemorative will be issued May 14 in Houston to salute the Skylab project.

Skylab IV splashed down Feb. 8 this year, after completing a record breaking 84 days in orbit. The fourth and final Skylab orbited the earth 1,214 times with a crew of three, collecting information increasing man's knowledge of his planet.

The stamp will be issued on the first anniversary of the Skylab I launch on May 14, 1973. That event thrust the United States into a new phase of the Space Age.

Depicted on the stamp is the dramatic two man space walk required to free a jammed solar panel during the Skylab II mission. (A magnifying glass is helpful in locating the two spacemen.)

Robert T. McCall, who designed the stamp, has been closely connected with the space program since 1958. It has been speculated that if the National Aeronautics and Space Administration ever decides to send an artist into space, McCall will probably get the nod.

The stamp will be printed in yellow, red, blue and black in two passes through the offset press and in blue and black in a single pass through the Giori. It will be issued in panes of 50 with only one plate number. The only printing on the stamp will be a white "US 10 cents" in the upper left and a blue "Skylab" in the lower right.

First day cancellation requests may be sent to "Skylab Stamp, Postmaster, Houston, Tex. 77013." Proper remittance must be enclosed, along with addressed covers, and the orders must be postmarked no later than May 14.

TURKEY. The death of Ismet Inonu, the second president of the Turkish Republic, was marked by the recent release of a 100-kurus stamp.

President Inonu, who was born in 1884 and died Dec. 25, 1973, also served as the republic's first prime minister. The stamp depicts a three-quarter face portrait and was printed by offset.

Other recent Turkish issues portrayed an F-28 and a DC-10 jet on two new regular air mails of 110 and 250-kurus value and issued six new regulars showing the export products of that country: cotton, grapes, figs, citrus fruit, tobacco and hazelnuts on 75, 90, 100, 250, 325 and 475-kurus stamps, respectively.

TOUCHING ALL BASES—April begins winding up the official ski season. Many of the more hearty (and wealthy) can jet off to far reaches for snow covered slopes but most are anchored to a desk or other occupational hazards. Colorado reports some ski resorts are closed now and others scheduled for this month.

A-Basin will close June 2 and Loveland May 5. All others will be closed this month:

Local ski slopes are beginning to wind up the season, and it wasn't too healthy.

Your Pet's Health

By H.P. JANS

Q. I have lost one nervous cat through moving once before. He was terribly upset and when we arrived at the new house he hid for days and wouldn't eat at all. Finally, after two weeks, I let him out of the house and he never came back. Now I have three cats, again we are facing a move of quite some distance, and one cat is especially nervous. Would it be less upsetting if he were tranquilized before we left so he would simply wake up in his new home?—Mrs. P.L.P., Palo Alto, Calif.

A. Moving can be a greater strain on pets than on humans. A pet's world is centered around the familiar surroundings of a home and neighborhood and to see it boxed up, put inside a truck and fade away into the distance is more than some animals can bear.

It is quite common for owners to give their nervous pets mild tranquilizers if they're to be exposed to the rigors of a vacation or moving. These tranquilizers are not available in pet stores but must be obtained through a veterinarian. He will be able to give you not only the proper dosage but also instructions on how and when to administer them.

Q. I have a large male cat which is almost 5 years old. He stays in the house when I'm home in the daytime whenever he wishes.

He has always seemed to love me but lately when I go to put him out at night he growls at me. Does this mean there is danger in him? I've had him since he was a kitten.—C.M., Monterey, Tenn.

A. The chances are that your cat is just expressing his displeasure at being ousted from the warm, comfortable surroundings of your house into the inhospitable night. This is not uncommon among pets when they are extremely attached to their masters. Unless you want him inside all the time, do not change the nightly ritual and eventually he'll resign himself to being put out at night.

Excitement Sweeps Navajo Auctions

By SHEILA TRYK

It was like a scene from another era, another world.

Navajo men in Stetsons and plaid jackets. Women with long gathered skirts, strands of heavy turquoise and silver jewelry, center-parted hair smoothed under bandannas, colorful mail-order blankets hugged around their thoulders. Bright-eyed, laughing children

They filled the seats in the gym behind. us, they lined up along the walls, they clustered in the doorways and outer

It hadn't seemed possible that so many people could appear from out of the vast, seemingly uninhabited land of canyons and mesas we had driven through in western New Mexico.

We were in a tiny settlement — a mere handful of buildings - known as Crownpoint, about 60 miles from Grants and Gallup, and some 30 miles north of I-40, deep in a historic and enchanted land.

In front of us in the gym, the small stage was heaped with Navajo rugs. Big ones, little ones, long ones, square ones, bright ones, subtle ones — more than 600 in all. And the auctioneer was chanting "Yamma yamma yamma sixty, gimme sixty-five, do I hear sixty-five, kimme sixty-five, do I hear sixty-five, sold to number 38 for sixty."

In less than a minute each, the rugs fell to the lucky buyers. And lucky they were. Rugs were being sold at half the price they would bring in the shops and trading posts of Santa Fe, Albuquerque, Denver of Los Angeles.

We had arrived in Crownpoint around 3 p.m. having earlier checked into a motel room in Grants - a good move, it turned out, as the auction and its hypnotic excitement lasted well past midnight.

The gym at the public school in Crown-point was already stacked with hundreds of Navajo rugs, and the doorway was jammed with women who had come to submit their rugs for sale.

Buyers were able then to inspect the rugs, jotting down the numbers of the ones they liked from the attached tags. We also made notes of the amount we thought we might have to pay for each

At 5 p.m chile and Navajo tacos (Indian fry bread topped with beans, meat, lettuce, chile and tomatoes - delicious!) were available for sale in the school cafeteria.

By 7 p.m., the gym was crowded buyers clutching their bid numbers in their hands, weavers and their families waiting to see the destiny of a rug that may have taken months of carding. dyeing, spinning and weaving.

A welcoming speech was made - in Navajo - by Mrs. Pauline McCauley, the auction chairman.

"Most of our weavers don't speak English," Mrs. McCauley explained.

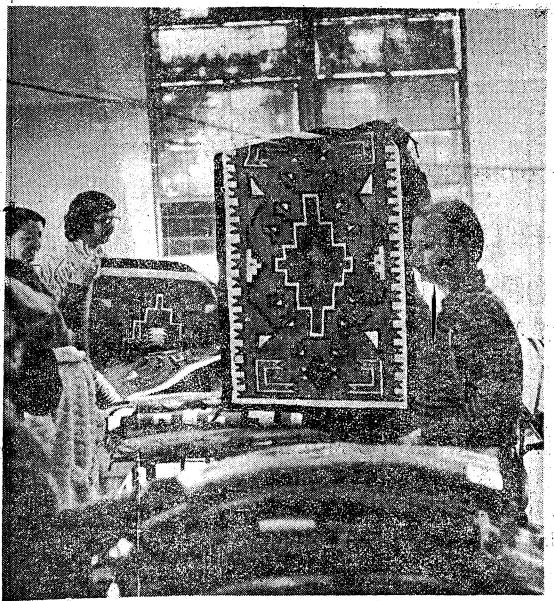

The professional auctioneers — three "Anglos" and a Navajo -worked rapidly, but it still took hours to get through the hundreds of rugs.

"Hold my hands down," whispered my husband, as a stunning Two Gray Hills rug was held up by the auctioneer. It was one we had already admired. A rug we judged would bring $1,500 or $2,000.

"Sold for $800," the auctioneer was saying, before we realized what had happened.

COLLECTOR'S ITEM - A prospective bidder holds up a stunning "Two Gray Hills" style Navajo rug for a friend to see during the inspection period prior to the Crownpoint Weavers Rug Auction.

TIME STANDS STILL - At the San Gabriel Mission, time seems to have stopped somewhere in the late 1770s. Handmade scroll woodwork frames the altar area and robed statues of saints gaze down from their lofty perch in the mission church where Masses are still celebrated on Sunday in both Spanish and English.

TRIP OF THE WEEK

San Gabriel Mission Haven For Memories Of Early Days

SAN GABRIEL — The hot sun beats down on the sleepy mission courtyard. casting long shadows across the worn red brick.

Occasionally, a pigeon flutters down from his perch atop the church to join others in their Chaplinesque strolls around a spot of shade.

Throughout the San Gabriel Misson, red brick walls surround small, grassy courtyards, framing various pictures of early California.

In one courtyard, a dome-shaped adobe kitchen stands adjacent to a smaller domed oven, once used to bake bread.

Across the way, narrow steps lead up to three well-like vats deep in the ground, each lined with brick, where Indians once boiled the ingredients for soap and candles.

In an adjacent courtyard, sunken tannery vats and a work area describe, with the help of a little imagination, scenes of native Indians first learning to treat

Beyond those stand rows of tombstones inscribed with the names of mission priests who died in the 1700s and some who died in the cholera and smallpox epidemic of 1825.

Nearby are the mission church and museum.

There, beyond the bright sunlight, the temperature inside suddenly drops. The uneven brick floors are worn smooth and the walls are lined with primitive paintings, describing the artist's conception of biblical scenes as described to him by the Catholic missionaries,_ Beyond these are displayed the once basic necessities of life and accounterments of religion, including bowls, urns, crude metal tools, colorful priestly robes, antique confessionals and figurines.

.. In the church, handmade scroll woodwork frames the altar area. On the back wall, robed statues of saints gaze down their lofty perch at the congregation.

But for all this, the San Gabriel Mission reveals only the bare outlines of its 200-year history, which includes battles between padres and Spanish soldiers, earthquakes, epidemics, mistreatment of Indians, by soldiers and thousands of baptisms, marriages and burials.

It begins in 1771, when Father Junipero Serra sent two padres from Mexico to build a mission in the San Gabriel Father Francisco Palou's account of their arrival with an escort of Spanish soldiers is as follows:

"Just as they were deliberating about the choice of a site, a great multitude of savages, armed and headed by two chiefs, appeared and with frightful yells attempted to prevent the founding of the mission

"Fearful that a battle might ensue and that some might be killed, one of the fathers produced a canvas picture of Our Lady of Sorrows and put it in view of the savages. No sooner had he done this than all, overcome by the sight of the beautiful image, threw down their bows and arrows...

"By the same action, they manifested their desire to be at peace with us."

Unfortunately, the Indians left no written account of their side of that meeting, but things were not always peaceful thereafter.

The padres' records include accounts of land disputes, of an Indian revolt, of foreign disease brought by settlers, and of two earthquakes which partially destroyed the mission in 1804 and again in 1812.

But the misson has withstood, and today offers the visitor a temporary refuge from the real world where the atmosphere of early Calfiornia still exists.

The mission, located at Mission Road and Junipero Serra, is open to visitors between 9:30 a.m. and 5 p.m, every day except Monday. Admisison is 50 cents per person.

On Sunday, Masses are celebrated in Spanish at 9 a.m. and in English at 11 a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

Cruise Provides A Lot To Talk A

By ALFRED JACOBY

GLACIER BAY, Alaska-Truthfully, glacier ice doesn't make your champagne any colder or wetter or taste any better.

But it sure gives you something to talk about back home after a cruise through the Inland Passage along British Columbia and into southern Alaska's Panhandle. Memories are what cruises are made of.

You see a lot of ice on the newly popular Alaska cruises. A lot of trees, too. And scenery. And old towns and new buildings. And considerable history, too, if you're interested. --

The Alaska cruise ships sometime have trouble satisfying the cruise cliche of sunshine and tanning by the pool because the summer season is short and sometimes pretty wet. But there are other attractions—the excitement of something new in cruising, the lure of short trips where the language is English and the money American, and always the heavy emphasis on entertainment day and night.

And, of course, Glacier Bay and glacier ice. There are 16 active glaciers at tidewater in Glacier Bay National Monument. Sometimes the ice slithers down with hardly a splash; now and again, almost as if one schedule for the cruise ships, there are great splashing chunks of blue ice sometimes 200 feet high that fall away into the green water.

The ships send out lifeboats to pick up chunks of ice to be used at dinner to chill champagne. "Hmmm, glacier ice, 1899," someone will quip. "A good year for glacier ice."

Alaska isn't all ice.

Ketchikan is wood buildings and totem poles and gewgaw stores. Juneau, the capital, is hills and water and new government buildings. There are memories of Russian occupation at Sitka and a population of 750 at Skagway all remembering the Gold Rush of '98.

The Alaska cruises—which suddenly become big business in the last five years-take you to San Francisco, Victoria, and Vancouver, too. Once mostly the property of the Alaskan state ferry system, the cruise business northward has been booming as various other companies joined the rush. Last year P&O, the granddaddy of the cruise business, joined the act to give the whole thing a cachet of success.

And even if the sun doesn't always shine, life aboard ship can be fun in an instant community in miniature, a community without worry and without chores.

There are no worries, for example, about housekeeping for the wife. And no feeling of guilt for the husband who is relaxing while his wife has to cook and scrub.

That's the joy of cruising: Someone else does the cooking, the cleaning, the straightening up and smoothing out. There are few deadlines to meet beyond getting to one or more of six meals a day which are served from sunup to mid-

It's a life that is more informal than cruising in the past. Fancy dress is mostly confined to ladies who want to show off their wardrobes or their figures. The rules of tipping are laid out in little booklets thoughtfully placed in your room.

Some things never change. The cruise director is still jolly and calls everyone "luv." He still majordomos the galas with all the zest of tradition-the costume parade, the formal gala, the captain's cocktail party, and above all else, the crew's entertainment night with the special talents of stewards and second officers. (Stewards tend toward speciality dancing; second officers are usually singers.)

ing is a glory. There are always new-lyweds, who never stop holding hands, and golden weds, who dream a lot in the day and drink a lot at night. There's day and drink a lot at mgm. always a mysterious menage a trois consisting of an evil-looking gentleman and two young companions.

For the young and alone (and sometimes the not-so-young and not-so-alone), there are the ship's officers, always handsome in dress whites and always have been perfect dancers, no matter what the

On the Alaska cruises the days slip by with the ship seldom out of sight of the green uncivilized western edge of the American continent. The firs, the spruce, the pine grow down to the shoreline, rising abruptly from the water in valleys whose walls were scoured by glaciers.

Tiny settlements come slowly into view and disappear into the wake.

Touring Japan Need Not Be Costly

By JACK P. GABRIEL

When Japan recently devalued the yen, allowing about 300 of them to the U.S. dollar, the changeover gave visitors about a 14 per cent bonus. That helps a great deal in making Japan less expensive than it has been. On the other hand, the high prices were mostly for visitors who could afford them, and were not concerned with traveling on a budget.

The less costly side of Japan is very much in evidence, especially for a visitor who does not want to spend a great deal of vacation money on a hotel room. This "situation is the same in all the large cities of the world; hotel rooms can cost a great deal, or very nice ones can be found, especially by inquiring, for small

Many travelers like to splurge a bit when they're away from home, and it could be they get their money's worth by complaining about the high prices they paid. But they never have to live it up in that manner; the choice is their own.

As the world's largest city, Tokyo has infinite variety in its accommodations. Anyone planning a trip to that country can contact the Japan National Tourist Organization at 624 S. Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif. 90017, and ask for information about good hotels and restaurants that are within the price range of travelers without a lot of money to

The best example of a good, inexpensive hotel is the brand-new Tokyo Hotel Urashima, which opened last November. There are 1001 rooms in its 16 stories, and its double rooms start at only $15.00, singles at $12.00. The rooms, and the bathrooms, are small, but so are the prices. It's the only hotel in Toyko that's located right on the harbor, and a fiveminute taxi ride from the Ginza, the famed shopping district that everyone wants to visit. This establishment is the answer to a prayer by the traveler who wants to spend money on something other than a hotel room.

And there are many others. The Dai-Ichi Hotel, about two years old, is right in the ginza district, and singles there start at $13.00, doubles at $18.00. The Ginza Capital, which is nearby and also two years old, has rooms at about the same price. All of these have dining rooms and coffee shops where the food is priced about the same as over here. Don't expect the luxury of the new MGM Grand Hotel in Las Vegas; these places cannot afford that, but the rooms are clean and comfortable at a very low charge.

Almost all visitors to Japan want to see Kyoto, and the new Central Inn in that ancient capital has rooms that start for as little as $8.00 for a single, and $17.00 for a double. The hotel situation can be that inexpensive all over the country. It must be added, however, that in order to rent rooms at those prices. these low-cost hotels have had to economize by eliminating such standards as room service, bell boys and some other service personnel. This does not result in any inconvenience to guests, who usually do not order from room service if they want something at little cost. On every floor there are machines that dispense hot coffee, milk and other cold drinks.

Eating inexpensively is also no problem; the sensible thing to do is to stay away from high price restaurants and night clubs. Japan is filled with small restaurants that have replicas in their windows of the food served within, and the prices are listed. It's no more than one dollar for a plate of good spaghetti, or perhaps up to three dollars for a fish dinner. Just go into the restaurant and point to what you want. Not much Engish will be spoken in these places, but the personnel will be anxious to please.

You will get what you want, accompanied by much giggling on the part of the waitress, and perhaps on yours.

Colonel Sanders' establishments are now ubiquitous, and if it's southern fried chicken you crave, you'll get it - Japanese style; there's a subtle difference, but you'll know what you're eating. The same thing goes for MacDonald's hamburgers. The major department stores have restaurants where the food is reasonably priced.

Japan is having its gasoline woes, too, as we are, but taxis have always been incredibly cheap in that country. In January, they increased their rates about 17 per cent, but they are still less expensive than in the U.S.A, and you can ride a long distance for a dollar. Drivers in Japan still do not accept a tip, foot. It's divided into many sections, so that makes a ride even that much cheaper than it is here.

That no-tipping custom is prevalent throughout the country. In hotels, of course, a service charge is added to the room rental, as it is here, but here we have the unnecessary habit of adding tips on top of everything else. The Japanese are paid for their work and they feel that gratuities are degrading. That's another bonus, for tipping almost everyone, wherever you go has gotten way out of hand.

Trains are cheap, as are bus trips and bus tours of any major city, so transportation does not put much of a dent in anyone's traveler's checks. Tokyo is a particularly interesting city to explore on each of which seems like a large city in itself, and whatever it is you see as you walk through the streets, it is not like anything you see at home.

Stay away from imported liquors if you're on a budget. The Japanese-made products are good substitutes, and they don't cost very much.

When you plan a night on the town at home, you usually know where you're going, perhaps to a favorite neighborhood restaurant, and how much it will cost. If you plan your trip carefully, you'll find that Japan is not necessarily expensive. There is no denying that it can be, of course, but it does not have to be for anyone traveling on a limited amount of money.

Red Customs Guard Against

cow's Sheremetyevo Airport shortly after the arrival of a flight from the West, customs officers A. Sharayev and R. Shafaranova are on alert.

The customs officials eye the fur and sheepskin coats worn by the Westerners, mostly tourists. As the travelers wait for their baggage, some look around and ask questions.

"When will the inspection of our luggage start?" one asks impatiently, according to the account in the army newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda.

"Will inspection be on a selective basis or will everone be checked? Asks another, showing signs of nerv ousness.

These are telltale signs and the experienced customs officers immediately recognize them, the newspaper said.

By the time their inspection is finished, Sharayev and Shafaranova have done their job well. They found nine tourists who were illegally trying to bring in about 2,500 pieces of anti-Soviet literature in various languages of the Soviet Union.

"Certainly the travelers were aware that this literature could not be be permitted to be brought here, but still they tried," the newspaper said. The customs officers had successfully thwarted an attempt to "poison the souls of our people."

The newspaper did not say so, but the list of published material that travelers are barred from bringing into the Soviet Union is not limited to literature that is openly hostile to the regime.

It ranges all the way from Playboy magazine to the Bible and includes most Western newspapers and magazines and books by Soviet writers that have only been published abroad.

The theme of the Krasnaya Zvezda article was a familiar one to Soviet newspaper readers. Periodically there are such tales in the press extolling the virtues of customs inspectors and border guards and warning of foreigners with antiSoviet inten-

Of the customs officers, Krasnya Zvezda said:

"They work shoulder to shoulder each day demonstrating vigilance not to be lulled by anything. In their important work they possess a strong sense of responsibility, high professionalism, resourcefulness and the ability to make the right decision instantly,"

It told of another customs man who caught two foreigners trying to smuggle in gold coins and foreign currency secreted in the soles of their shoes. Their awkward walk, as if they had flat feet, gave them away.

"Customs officers at Sheremetyevo are no amateurs, the report said.

'Jacob and Joseph'

ABC's Palm Sunday special was filmed in the Holy Land during the recent Arab-Israeli fighting

By ANDREA WOJACK

AST OCTOBER, while the drama of what has been called the Yom Kippur war was unfolding, an American TV camera crew, under the same relentless Middle Eastern sun, was busy focusing on quite a different story.

They were filming "The Story of Jacob and Joseph," a two-hour special re-creating the lives of the Biblical patriarchs.

The special, to be shown on ABC this Palm Sunday evening, was filmed in many areas where Old Testament tradition indicates events actually occurred — including the hill country of Canaan and the region around Jerusalem.

Although not in the combat areas, ABC's team experienced wartime problems which halted production of the program for eight days.

For instance, about 75 percent of the Israeli technical crew was called to active duty when fighting began. In addition, many of the extras left the production to report to the front.

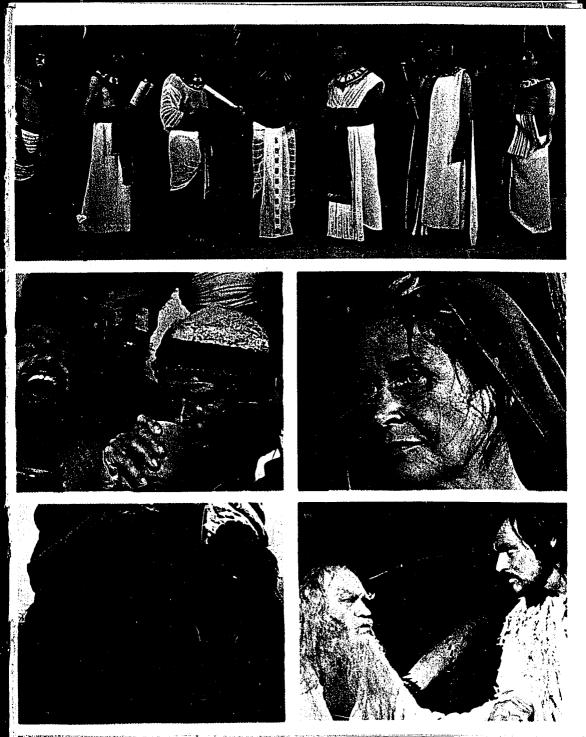

Actor Tony Lo Bianco, who portrays Joseph in the special, remembers the trying times.

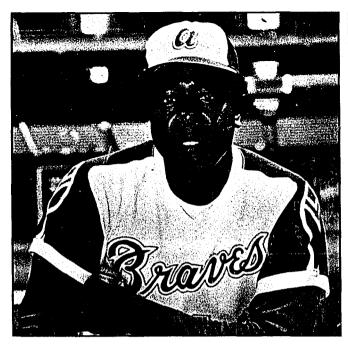

"On their days off," he says, "the extras would show up at the location, still in uniform, with the mud from the Golan Heights on their shoes, to resume their roles in the film. At the end of the day, they'd change back into uniform and return to their units at the front."

Despite the complications, shooting was finished on schedule.

"The Story of Jacob and Joseph" features an international cast including Herschel Bernardi as Laban.

Atlanta Braves' slugger Hank Aaron

Hitting No. 700

The Year of Hank Aaron

ASEBALL MAY WELL remember 1974 as the year of Henry Aaron. The year may be recalled for decades as the season the Atlanta slugger tied — and then passed — Babe Ruth to become the all-time home run hitter.

Before the season ends, it seems certain that Hammerin' Hank, like the mighty Babe, also will become a legend. He might even set records that fans believe — like they did about Ruth — never will be equaled nor surpassed.

Last season, as he closed in on Ruth's career mark of 714. Aaron blasted 40 homers, bringing his total to 713.

Now 40 and nearing the end of his brilliant career, Aaron has never been more the man of the hour. He's the guy fans will be watching Monday when NBC begins its nighttime coverage of major league baseball with the Braves' home opener with the Dodgers.

Millions of TV fans will join the home folks in waiting for Hank to drill one out of the park as he quietly but dramatically tries to rewrite the record books.

Pilots

By LARRY DISTEL

TV MAGAZINE EDITOR

Right now most of what you are seeing on TV can come under two general headings: re-runs or pilots.

So far as that goes you already have seen many programs this season which were designed as pilots for prospective new series. The networks seem to prefer calling these program development projects nowadays, but if you are familiar with the term "pilots" that comes to the same thing.

There is always one trouble about this type of programming. Much of the publicity points to the possibility that the program may lead to a series. Many of the performers, as they appear on talk shows or in interviews, give the impression the project is a definite series.

As a result many viewers, when the new season starts in the fall, or sometime later when it suddenly occurs to them that they've seen no more of that series and its star or stars, start asking what happened?

Well, the answer is very simple.

At the present time there are reportedly something like 110 so-called program development projects kicking around in one stage or another of progress.

In a normal season there are something less than 65 or 70 series on the schedule, and this includes the various network movies, those anthology type groupings of mini-series, and the few children's and semi-documentary type shows that appear weekly.

O.K. So whether you are older and prefer the old mathematics or have learned to work out things by the new math it is quite clear that a good many of those 110 pilots aren't going to make it.

In fact, even if the slate was wiped entirely clean, and we were to see all new shows every fall, it would take a couple of seasons to use up the current supply.

Right now, the best guessing is that no more than about 25 new series will make their way on to network schedules next fall. Personally I'm not so sure that might be a liberal guess, though in these days of lumping three or four mini-series into one weekly time slot on an alternate basis it's possible the figure may go past two dozen.

-Before taking a look at some of the shows that make up this rather long pilot list, let's digress for a moment and consider what might go off to make room for what comes on.

ABC first. Considered almost sure to go is "The Brady Bunch," which has surprised by surviving in past years, but this time it seems almost certain to end its run.

"Partridge Family" also may go as it has slipped badly in the ratings, thoughit has had little chance against Why Buy a Color TV when you can lease it.

Because in the long run it's cheaper than buying, just look at the facts! When you buy you pay a down payment-delivery and installation are included in the purchase price. Then there's the monthly bills, and the carrying charges, and the service contracts, and the charges for parts and labor. Gets to be pretty expensive, right?

When you rent, on the other hand, from us, you get free delivery, free and unlimited service, including all parts and labor - all for one low monthly rental charge.

That's the difference! What's it cost? That depends upon the size and styling that you want - anywhere from as low as $12.45/month to $35.95 month with the option of buying the set.

Who are we? One of the largest Color TV Rental Services on the West Coast, and one of the best. We're from England, where rentals far outnumber purchases and we improved on the idea. Call us, we'll gladly give you all the information you want - and prove that renting is really cheaper than buying.

TV MAGAZINE, Week Of April 7 - 13

A SECOND TRUST DEED LOAN FOR 8½% INTEREST.

AND WE'VE CUT THE ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE TO 11.93%

One very important thing to know about borrowing money is the Annual Percentage Rate—because it's the true cost of your loan. That's why the Federal Truth in Lending Law makes sure you see it before you make a loan. Most other companies ask you to pay an Annual Percentage Rate up around 18%. That's because they charge you 10% interest, a maximum commission and give you a short time to repay (often with one of those impossible balloon payments at the end).

Not us. We've cut the interest rate to 8½%, cut our commission, and eliminated the balloon payment by giving you more time to repay. We offer you an Annual Percentage Kate of $1.93%.

The figures look like this. For every $1,000 you borrow, you pay only $14.40 a month. Your loan, including principal and interest, will be paid in full in 8 years. The total of payments is $1,380.

Or, if you choose, we can arrange a shorter term loan at a proportionately higher Annual Percentage Rate. Naturally, you can pay off your loan at any time by paying interest on the balance in accordance with state law.

You can borrow from $1,000 to $50,000 on a first or second trust deed loan—on any real estate anywhere in California. On the average, you'll have your loan in 10 days. And sometimes, we can do it even faster.

No fancy promises. No double-talk. We're simply brokers who think it's good business to give you more money for your money.

"I got a better job because of Sawyer training."

Brenna Martino, Sawyer Graduate
I got a better job because of Sawyer training.
Now I'm a skilled secretary with real responsibility, and the pay check to prove it. I have the extra money to do what I want. My own apartment. New clothes. Everything. Because I went to Sawyer. They even helped me find a job.

Don't you want a better job and more money? I thank my Sawyer training every payday. You can, too. Call or write for your free booklet today. It will tell you why....

SAWYER GRADUATES GET BETTER JOBS.

Viewers Write

(To ABC) I am writing to protest the changing of ABC Wide World of Entertainments' "In Concert" series. I was an avid fan of this series until about two months ago. It drastically changed, now having second rate talent as guest stars and an obnoxious host, Robert W. Morgan. If you cannot find top name groups as in the past I urge you to repeat those earlier shows.

(Ed note: Only hope the writer signed the original which he didn't to us. Unsigned letters get short shrift from most recipients, including TV networks).

(To NBC) I am writing to rave about "The World You Never See." It is the best nature film I have ever seen. I only wish I had not already put the children to bed. Please rerun this show at an earlier time, as it would be a real loss if the children never get to see it. Mrs. P.L., Huntington Beach.

In reference to other letters about "Happy Days," I feel the show zeros in on what was going on in the 50's. I personally enjoy the show and have had many laughs, plus it has brought back many fond memories.—S.K.G, Garden Grove.

The "Wonderful World of Disney" is the only show on TV that our entire family watches every week, doing so for many years. The children are 9 and 11. Nature shows are favorites.—Mrs. P.M.

When "All in the Family" was first introduced it was comical and entertaining, but it wasn't long before we realized it had degenerated into nothing more than a propaganda vehicle and it became underhanded, and a bore. We refuse now to tune it in, and the same goes for "Maude."—C.A.W., Irvine

"All in the Family" and "Emergencv!"

Only one of this network's mid-season replacements has done very well and that is "Happy Days," which seems likely to continue next fall. But the word has not been good for "The Cowboys," "Chopper One" or "Firehouse."

Some of the networks longer shows. including "Owen Marshall" are on shaky ground and continuation may depend largely on whether ABC brass decides something among the pilots might do better.

Lucille Ball, of course, is leaving

CBS, opening up a Monday night time slot which long has proved a prize for the network. Dick Van Dyke, who has followed her this season, may be in difficulty. Sonny and Cher, as such, is not likely to be back, but there's some talk of Cher carrying on by herself.

Other CBS shows which appear certain to get the ax are the two new-"Dirty Sally" and "Good Times," and quite possibly "Medical Center."

Jimmy Stewart's "Hawkins" may give way in its occasional appearances to some other entry of the same type. "Shaft" really hasn't done too well, either, for that matter.

NBC has a few problem areas, too, and in fact seems to be working with a much longer list of pilots than it has in most recent years. The assumption then is that it will be goodbye for some of those now running.

"The Magician," despite mid-season changes, hasn't pulled the desired audiences, so could be on the way out. Flip Wilson already said he won't be back, and there's no certainty about Dean Martin, either.

The NBC lineup on Friday night is almost certainly in for a major shakeup. "Lotsa Luck," "Girl with Something Extra" and the Brian Keith show all have dawdled around well down the ratings lists. Add to that the network's problems with Redd Foxx and the Dean Martin situation and it could be a complete wineout.

Now please don't write me to give me heck for listing shows in danger, for what I have said doesn't reflect my own views on shows, but is merely an attempt to report on how things are shaping up.

And if anyone suggests one should "report" only on facts, one can only respond by saying that no one in his right mind would dare at this point to make an unqualified statement about what will be on network schedules in the fall.

The networks will be making their announcements within a short time, hopefully, and who knows when the men who make the final decisions will get the views of the Big Boss's wife, or maybe their own Aunt Minnie or Uncle Bill back on the farm in Iowa?

Don't laugh. Just how those people do go about selecting their new schedules has baffled most observers for years, and it probably won't be different this year.

Now a quick look at some of the pilot projects, and these are not necessarily those with the best chance of being on your tube next fall.

NBC has one comedy series "American Bag" listed, which would have Dennis Weaver as the star. That immediately opens a new kettle of fish, for does that mean he won't be continuing with "McCloud"?

Fess Parker, of all peope, has a comedy series in the works for CBS. And Dale Robertson, another veteran of the Western wars, would be star of "Purvis, G-Man," based on exploits of one of the early FBI heroes. This would be for ABC.

The British are still coming, with NBC tinkering with a comedy series currently called "My Wife Next Door," based on a British series.

Bob Hope is even among the projected series stars, with something called "Bluffer's Guide." Though mentioned as an hour comedy program, at present one can't be sure whether it's intended as a weekly series or so to be on sporadically as his present specials.

There's more boat-rocking with the listing of Telly Savalas as host for something CBS tentatively calls "Nobody's Perfect," which apparently would be something like a collection of comedies. If this hits does Savalas drop "Kojak" or does he double up with both?

John Denver is down for a variety hour with ABC as prospective carrier. Before you younger folk scream in ecstasy remember this is still prospective, and may depend on how he goes in a special or two.

Something like two, or maybe it was even three, years ago we mentioned in a treatment similar to this that Barbara Eden was working on a possible comedy series. Seems I got more letters about that one as it never appeared than any other such prospective series. Well, she's still down as star of her own comedy series, with ABC as the network. But it's still prospective, remember.

The Magic World of Disney

NE OF THE most popular TV commercials

several seasons ago was an ad featuring a pixieish blond bank teller. The pixie was Sandy Duncan, hardly a show biz newcomer. She had already won two Tony nominations—one for the Broadway musical "Canterbury Tales" and another for the Broadway revival of "The Boy Friend."

Since then Sandy has starred in her own TV series, "Funny Face," and gone through a much-publicized eye operation which left her blind in one eye.

A quick recovery brought her back to TV for guest starring spots and specials. Last year she hosted the "Tonight Show," one of the few women in the entertainment world to fill Johnny Carson's shoes for an evening.

This Wednesday, Sandy stars as a distaff Pied Piper who sings and dances her way through the magic world of Disneyland in Southern California, leading a company of guest personalities, in "Sandy in Disneyland." The program was taped on locations throughout the West Coast amusement complex which, for the first time since its inception, opened its doors to an outside production unit. Miss Duncan's guests are Ernest Borgnine, Ruth Buzzi, John Davidson, Lorne Greene, the Jackson 5, Ted Knight, Loggins & Messina and Doc Severinsen.

That Cute, Lovable Little Chick Is Not a Pet

This chick size merry-go-round was made by Dr. Robert E. Cook, the head of the Poultry Science Department at North Carolina State University. His chicks are not pets, but are used as part of an exhibit to show the important part that chickens play in our lives.

The chicks also have a ferris wheel.

Little chicks are one of the symbols of the new life that comes at Easter time.

For many years, these soft and cuddly little chicks were dyed many colors and sold as gifts for children. This was very cruel and most states have ruled that it is against the law to sell them as pets.

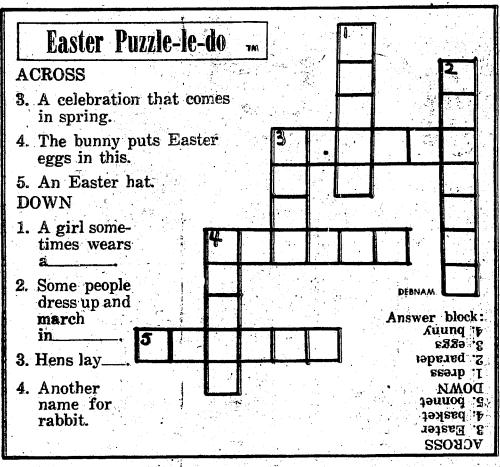

They are so small that a hug could crush their tiny bones. They have to be kept at temperatures of around 90 degrees during their first days of life. This is hard to do without an incubator.

Chicks are really only so cute for just about one week, then they begin to lose their downy feathers as they start to grow into adult chickens. They cannot be housebroken, so that's another reason they do not make good pets.

Most chicks are raised in hatcheries or on big chicken farms in incubators. They never know their mothers. There are two types of chickens. One is raised for meat. The smaller size is raised for the eggs they lay.

A hen will lay around one egg a day for 12 to 15 days. Then she will take a rest for a day and start laying over again.

As the eggs are laid, if they are to be hatched, the farmer will put them into a refrigerator and keep them until he has gathered the number he wants. Then he will put them into an incubator so a group will hatch at the same time. It takes about 21 days for chicks to hatch.

Easter Fashions

The custom of getting new clothes goes back to the time when most Christians were baptized in new white robes the week before Easter.

Because of the rising prices and the changing times, people don't get new Easter outfits as often as they used to. However, it's still fun to see what's in style this year.

Girls will be wearing the frilly, old fashioned style dresses in prints with lots of smocking and lace. Pink and blue are big colors. Pastel stockings and socks are IN. The cape is good.

The Madras look sports coat and solid knit slacks with cuffs are IN for boys.

You'll need:

- 1 number 5 size white paper sack
- several sheets of newspaper
- yellow tempra paint and brush
- red, orange and blue construction paper
- paste scissors glue ribbon

1. Ball up the newspapers and stuff them into the bag. Paint the bag yellow and let it dry.

2. Tie a ribbon around the smaller end to make the head. Paste the top edges together by folding them over.

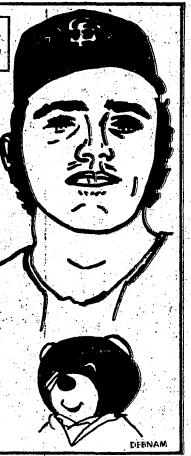

DEBNAM 3. Cut out wings and feet and paste them on. Cut out the bill and the eyes. Paste them on.

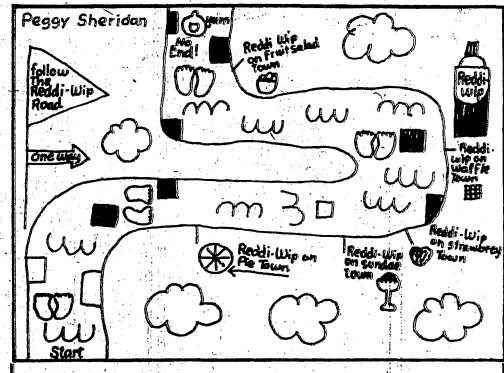

Hatching chicks in the classroom is very educational. If possible, you can get eggs that will hatch from a nearby hatchery. Special incubators for classroom use are available. Remember, when the chick hatches, it is not a pet. Maybe your teacher can get a farmer to take the chicks when they get too big! These chicks are being handled with great care under the supervision of a teacher!

Super Sport: Ron Bryant

Ron Bryant and his teddy bear are ready for another baseball season. Bryant, who pitches for the San Francisco Giants, takes his famous teddy to the ball games and sits him in the dugout. The bear, which Ron bought from a little girl in 1972, is a good luck charm. With the bear nearby, Ron won 24 games and lost 12 for the Giants in 1973. He was the only pitcher in the National League towin 20 games. Until the teddy bear came along, Bryant's pitching records were not very impressive. Ron is a 25-year old lefthander.

Two Easter Customs

Sunrise Services

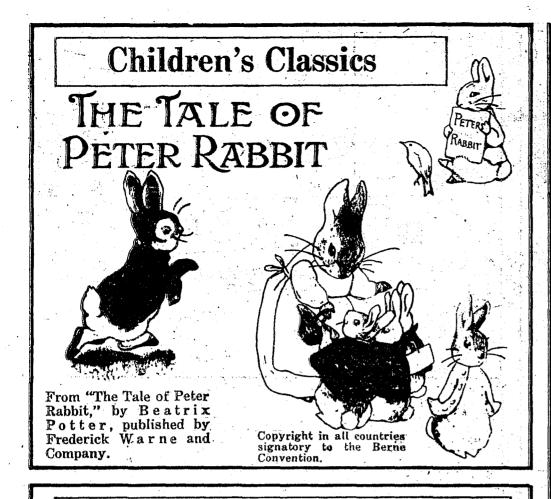

Sunrise services are held Easter morning throughout the country. These early morning worship services help us to welcome the new life that comes with the warm sunlight of spring. They also remind people that after darkness comes the light of day and the joy and hope for the future.

The White House Easter Egg Roll

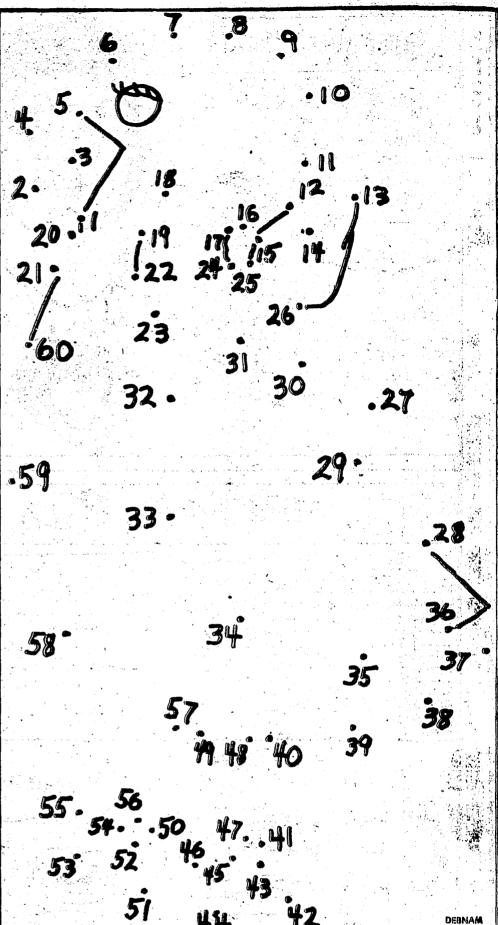

The Easter Egg Roll on the White House lawn on Easter Monday morning has been a custom for around 150 years. Children gather and roll hard-boiled eggs against each other, or down small hills. The object is to try to keep from cracking the shell.

Beatrix Potter

Beatrix Potter is a very famous children's writer and illustrator. She first wrote the favorite, "Tale of Peter Rabbit," as a letter to a friend's son who was sick. Her illustrations are loved by children in many countries. Miss Potter lived most of her life in a small cottage on her farm in the English lake country. She liked animals and wrote about many of her pets. Her other books include "Benjamin Bunny," "Two Bad Mice" and "The Tale of Tom Kitten." She lived from 1866 to 1943.
